Stuart Holmes dropped into our office the other day, and some way or other, the conversation drifted round to hunting. No, we aren't going to assert that it was a remarkable coincidence that Mr. Holmes had just returned from the most exciting hunt of his career. We merely imply it, and you can believe that Mr. Holmes manipulated the topics of our chat or not, just as you choose. Mr. Holmes started for Onowa, Maine, on December first, it seems, and got as far as Portland. There one of those practical persons who are always taking the joy out of life, told him that the deer season in Maine closed November 30th, and if he wanted to have any sport at all, he had better hurry into New Hampshire as fast as he possibly could.

Having arrived at the large and well known town of Bartlett, N. H., Mr. Holmes went in search of a license. A license he might have, he discovered, at slight expense, but it wouldn't do him any good if he stayed in Bartlett. If he really wanted some good shooting, he had best go on to Jackson. No, there weren't any trains that day, but he might hire a fliver, if his haste was very great, and he might be able to get a guide at Jackson. It wouldn't be any use for him to go without a guide. No strangers ever found any deer by themselves.

Mr. Holmes hired the fliver, secured the guide, and after hours and hours of chilly trudging through snow covered hills, and more hours waiting for new fallen snow to thaw or freeze—not being familiar with hunting requisites, we forget which it was—Mr. Holmes finally got his much prized buck. We regret to say that we have also forgotten its exact weight, but we know that it must have been a very large one, because Mr. Holmes was so enthusiastic about it, and Mr. Holmes is not the sort of gentleman who is given to enthusiasm over trivial things. Personally, we should have liked the story much better if he hadn't got the deer, but we're always truthful, where other peopl are concerned, and, of course, wouldn't have been a good huntin story to finish with an empty gan bag. Mr. Holmes ate venison fc weeks, we understand, and he is hav ing the head mounted by an exper so that it will be really decorati when it is hung. Then, as it is muc too large for his own front hall, h is considering offering it as a premiu to the producer who makes him th best offer for his next picture.

Showman Boosts Martin Johnson Scenes

Martin H. Feld, manager of the big Newman Theatre in Kansas City, Mo., is one of the firm boosters of Martin Johnson's series of spectacular productions, "On the Borderland of Civilization," released by Robertson-Cole. Exhibitors in the West use the Newman Theatre as an indicator and if a production goes over big there, it is sold in that territory. For this reason, officials of Robertson-Cole believe that the letter sent to them unsolicited from Mr. Field, carries all the more weight.

Following is a copy of the letter dealing with the new Martin Johnson series as sent by Mr. Feld:

"After screening the first two releases of the new Martin Johnson series 'On the Borderland of Civilization,' I decided that they would fill a long felt want on the programs at the Newman. This type of picture is not only unique and unusual, but combines all of the elements of a scenic and magazine reel. The fact that they are out of the ordinary and entirely different from any other reel release make them most desirable."

Miss Reed's Next Bears Exploiting Material

Florence Reed's next United Picture Theatres of America feature will not be called "The Alibi" as first announced. Although the feature is already being filmed, the title has not as yet been selected, but will be chosen during the next few days.

According to a report from the United Picture Theatres of America, the picture contains three possible angles of exploitation. Miss Reed's part affords her opportunity to register strongly in the various emotional phases of the action. Her role gives her the chance to display an array of the latest and most fashionable gowns. Finally, the fact that she has only recently completed a country-wide tour of the speaking stage is also regarded to afford additional channels for exploitation.

Strong Cast in Clara K. Young's Next

Harry Garson has again assembled an extraordinary cast of prominent personalities for his next Equity picture, starring Clara Kimball Young.

"The Forbidden Woman" is to be the title of the second release and supporting Clara Kimball Young are Conway Tearle, Jiguel Lanoe, Kathryn Adams, Wintor Hall, Milla Davenport, Stanton Williams and Jack Mackinnon. In addition to appearing in "The Forbidden Woman," Mr. Tearle has been placed under a long term contract by Garson for future Equity films.

Former Lawyer Engaged by Mayer in West

The report from the Louis B. Mayer Production offices announces that Milton H. Schwartz has abandoned law practice in Oakland and San Francisco and has joined the Louis B. Mayer forces at the Los Angeles studio where he has become assistant to the president.

Three Fox Specials Open 1920

New Year Finds Twelve Screen Productions Already Started

WILLIAM FOX, with the opening of the new calendar year, had twelve screen productions under way, including both the Eastern and the Western companies.

Among the twelve, are three special features which will be included in the entertainments offered by Mr. Fox within the next quarter. First of this trio may be mentioned the production of Premier Clemenceau's only novel, "The Strongest," under the direction of R. A. Walsh. "This picture will be a most elaborate one with an all-star French cast, and a scenic presentation of suitable splendor," says the Fox report.

Next of the specials listed by Fox for the new year is the five-part Sunshine Special upon which the entire Fox Sunshine Comedy personnel in Hollywood is centering its best efforts, it is said. This is reported to be something along bigger lines than anything hitherto done on the Fox comedy lot, and is promised as a new departure in seashore comedies with the sunshine widows in their sunniest moods. Fanciful costuming and bright snappy humor are features of the film, and Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of Fox Sunshine Comedies is directing this Sunshine Deluxe himself, with the assistance of every Comedy director on the lot, according to reports.

Another of the Fox specials now in course of making in the East, is being directed by Charles J. Brabin, of "Kathleen Mavourneen" fame. Very little in the way of publicity is being issued on this picture, but the producer announces that it will bring "a big surprise to the screen." "It is an all-star production, adapted from the work of a well-known author, and will introduce it is understood many startling effects and novelties." is the advices received from the offices of the Fox organization.

"Flames of the Flesh," a William Fox picture starring Gladys Brockwell, is meeting with success in its early showings

William Farnum, who has just completed "Heart Strings," has started work upon a new vehicle as yet unnamed. The production is said to be of a lavish nature, and the story gives Mr. Farnum the role of a romantic adventurer. J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed Mr. Farnum in all his recent successes, is with the star again in the forthcoming play, and has already made rapid strides in the work.

The remainder of the twelve pictures being made in one or another of the Fox studios include: "The White Moll," adapted to the screen by E. Lloyd Sheldon from Frank L. Packard's story, in which Pearl White makes her debut under William Fox management; "Find the Woman," with George Walsh as star; "The Penalty," an adaptation of a well-known stage success, with Madlaine Traverse in the stellar role; Charles Reade's "White Lies," starring Gladys Brockwell; Shirley Mason in her first Fox vehicle, "Her Elephant Man," and William Russell in the Harold Titus story, "Shod With Fire." Buck Jones is working for Fox on another Harold Titus western story, "The Last Straw," and Tom Mix completed the first of his six H. H. Van Loan stories, "3 Gold Coins," just after the new year opened.

"Taken altogether, the twelve make an impressive array for the Fox company, each of the productions marking a distinct forward step in a steady march toward perfection in the silent drama, and the three big specials representing the best brains and talent the film world provides—all crowded into a group of twelve. Looks like a case of "buy 'em by the dozen," concludes the Fox announcement.

Bigger Selznick Publicity Dep't.

Specialists Gathered from All Over the Country

A BROADSIDE campaign of publicity, advertising, exploitation and service to back up the exhibitors of Selznick pictures is announced this week by Sam E. Morris, General Manager of the Selznick Enterprises. Each of these branches has not only been expanded and departmentized at the home office, but a chain has been thrown across the entire country, designed to assist in materially building up the box office value and drawing power of any picture bearing the Selznick stamp.

The building up process in New York began with the appointment of Lee Kugel, recently of the Republic Distributing Corporation as General Publicity Director, with supervision over advertising, exploitation and Service. Mr. Kugel at once, beside retaining the experts attached to Select, added several skilled writers, exploitation and advertising men to his staff.

Mr. Kugel has had a wide experience in general all around publicity. Beside being business manager for Ermeti Novelli, Sir Henry Irving and Ellen Terry, he was the first man to do publicity for Nazimova, bringing her to the English speaking stage. He also has been with Sothern, Marlowe, Ada Rehan and was with Henry B. Harris during some of his greatest successes. He produced Shaw's "Widower's Houses", "Old Lady Thirty One" and "The Net", and has handled publicity for over two hundred plays that were produced on Broadway.

In direct charge of the writing staff and as right hand man to Mr. Kugel is Lee S. Ferguson, for two years an associate editor of Motion Picture News and four years on the staff of The Billboard. Before that Ferguson was in the circulation, advertising and editorial departments of leading newspapers.

Lowell Cash, who joined the Selznick staff from Universal, will do most of the writing for the trade journals. Before coming to New York from the Indianapolis News, Cash had handled exploitation and trade paper work beside editing motion picture columns in various dailies.

Kugel has also garnered two prolific all-around writers in Will C. Murphey and Stanley Bayer. Murphy has written for the speaking stage and the screen, handled publicity for the Republican National Committee, and Madison Square Garden, and been a feature writer for the Herald, and American as well as Pictorial editor of the New York Sun. In addition to being a writer on several New York papers, Bayer was with the publicity department of the World Film Corporation, and with the advertising department of the Saturday Evening Post.

The women's angle will be looked after by Miss Hortense Saunders and Miss Katherine Anne Porter. Miss Saunders was for nearly five years on Cleveland newspapers holding at various times the positon of feature writer, dramatic critic and motion picture exhibitor. The "fan fodder" will be handled by Miss Saunders, who was also an active member of the Cleveland Playhouse group and assisted in designing scenery and costumes for the Playhouse's productions. Miss Porter, who has been writing feature stories and doing general all-around newspaper work, comes from the west and her principal line will be in the studios where she will dig up facts about productions and players.

In connection with the general expansion of the work, Charles McClintock, an old time theatrical man, is named Exploitation Director and Ben H. Grimm is made advertising manager. Watt L. Parker remains in charge of press books, James G. Solomon is in charge of the service department and Randall White, recently of Moving Picture World, steps in as editor of the Motion Picture Times.

Mr. Kugel has also engaged Charles Duprez, the widely known trick photographer, whose pictures and stories have appeared in the leading magazines of the country, to supply the trade journals and magazines with photographs which will have a special appeal to the readers.

Jottings From The Coast

Roscoe Arbuckle and his manager, Lou Anger, arrived home this week from a brief stay in New York City. The home-coming was made a joyous event by members of the Arbuckle producing staff, who collected a Chinese band and greeted their star and director at the station. They even carried the parade through the center of the street and made it one of the features of holiday week that many tourists in Los Angeles will remember.

Arrangements have been perfected for starring Buster Keaton in a three-reel comedy and the first release was started this week at the Arbuckle studio in Culver City. For the next several weeks, Mr. Arbuckle will be busy working in his first multiple reel subject, "The Round Up," which is to be the first George H. Melford production released by Famous Players-Lasky.

Al St. John & Company have begun the filming of the fourth Paramount comedy, which is at present known as "A Tough Tenderfoot." Frank Griffin is starting as director, following the completion of editing the third St. John comedy, which will be released under the title of "Ship Ahoy!"

Al St. John made test of Harry Green, the Orpheum circuit star this week. Green played this sketch several years in the leading vaudeville theatres and if the test is satisfactory, he will play the leading role in the motion picture of the same name. In the making of a test, Al St. John serves as director.

The Douglas Fairbanks Company is planning to leave January 5th for the mountainous country in the vicinity of Flagstaff, Arizona, where they will spend a month. Preparations for this trip include the purchase of sixty tents and complete outfits, together with three hundred and forty blankets. Tom Garrity and Douglas Fairbanks have prepared the story for this film, but no title has been selected. Included in the party will be Frank Campbell, Eagle Eye and a number of others, totaling in all about fifty. Victor Fleming will serve as director of this subject.

Mal St. Clair, formerly with Mack Sennett producing organization, has made two two-reel comedies at the Katherine MacDonald studio, under the supervision of Sam E. Rork. One is titled "Welcome Home," and the second "I'll Say He Forgot." Both feature Otis Harlann, former stage actor, who was starred in musical comedies. The principal players are May Emory, Joe Moore and Joseph Scott. No announcement has been made by Mr. Rork pertaining to the release of these pictures.

Mary Miles Minter, the Realart Picture's star, who recently completed "Judy of Rogue's Harbor," presented on Christmas day to her charming sister, Margaret Shelby, a magnificent Country Club Packard Roadster of the popular Verdun maroon tint. This costly gift created temporary speech impedimentia in the beautiful Margaret, who seldom lacks for witty repartee.

Harry Van Meter is playing in two pictures at once—doing the heavy with Frank Keenan in "Out of the Ashes," and taking a similar part in support of May Allison in "Judah" for Metro.

The fourth episode of the new Eddie Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," has been completed at Universal under the direction of the star. By using some of the scenes obtained on his recent trip abroad, Polo will be able to complete one episode a week until reaching the tenth chapter. The entire eighteen episodes will be ready for release March 1. Immediately following the completion of the present serial, Polo and an entire company will set sail for South America, where another thriller will be filmed.

Pete Smith Nimbly Dodges Plagiarism Charge

The cabbage was boiling, the clock was ticking, the baby was crying and Pete Smith, director of publicity for Marshall Neilan, was cussing when the telephone rang. A cold always made Pete feel like a wreck. Disconsolately he ate another aspirin tablet and limped over to the telephone.

"Heddo," wailed Pete. Running noses never did encourage telephone conversations.

INDICATIONS of the future plans of productions by Sol M. Another comedy has been started by Roy DelRuth, brother of the Supervising Director, which is spoken of at the studio as the mystery comedy.

About Metro Players

IT has been found necessary to alter production activities at Metro Studios because of the automobile accident which befell Marguerite DelaMotte last week which resulted in painful injury to the star and also injury to her mother which caused the death of Mrs. DelaMotte two days following the accident. The father of the prominent young actress who was also injured is now on the road to recovery. Perhaps the most serious injury to Miss DelaMotte is that of the nervous shock, her physician stating that it would be several weeks before she will be able to resume her work before the camera. Miss DelaMotte is playing the leading role in Metro's second Drury Lane melodrama, "The Hope."

Director Herbert Blache is this week completing arrangements for filming the battle scenes between the British and Indian soldiers. These battle scenes take place in the famous pass of India and location said to be identical with the Indian setting has been found near Chatsworth Park, and here the hundreds of extras needed for the scenes will battle for the next week or ten days.

The Arizona state prison has served director Arthur D. Ripley, Bert Lytell and company for the necessary prison scenes for "Alias Jimmy Valentine." The company returned from Arizona this week after spending five days in the prison.

The San Francisco bay will be used for exteriors in the Alice Lake Screen Classic, "Shore Acres." The Metro Company composed of twenty members went to the northern city December 28 and will remain there for about ten days. Two large seagoing boats have been leased for use of the company and to get proper lighting effects, these windjammers were fitted with lighting equipment. A number of night storm scenes will be filmed aboard the vessels.

Work has been started by Finis Fox on preparing continuity for the third Drury Lane melodrama which will be "Hearts and Trumps." This will not be put into production for several weeks.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

THE Famous Players-Lasky studio is working at maximum production speed now, inasmuch as seven companies are engaged in the making of new productions, the greatest number to be filming at one time for the past several months.

With the return of Roscoe Arbuckle from his New York trip, he will take up the part of the fat sheriff, 'Slim Hoover', in George H. Melford's initial production, "The Round-Up."

The other films now being made are "The Fighting Chance", directed by Chas. Maigne; "The Prince Chap", by William C. DeMille; Wallace Reid in "The Dancin' Fool"; Bryant Washburn, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram"; Robert Warwick in "Thou Art the Man", and Ethel Clayton, under the direction of Walter Edwards in "A Lady in Love."

Donald Crisp will begin the filming of "Held By the Enemy" about January 8th.

Jack Holt, who has appeared in a number of Famous Players-Lasky, and other west coast made subjects, has been placed under a long term contract by Jesse L. Lasky, and will do his first work under the contract in "Held By The Enemy."

Miss Jeanie MacPherson, who has been east on a holiday trip, is back at the Hollywood Lasky studio working on the next production which Cecil B. DeMille will film.

A. B. Wilkie of the Lasky publicity department is going east to do some special exploitation work, and will remain in New York about one month.

Goldwyn

THE holiday lull continues at the Goldwyn Studios and it will be several days before production activities again reach the maximum. At the present time but three companies are at work making "The Road to Destiny," "Earthbound" and the "Edgar" stories. Casts for all of these films have been given in previous issues.

The Goldwyn band, which was started several weeks ago to furnish pleasure and amusement for members of the studio staff, has been found to be a much needed organization this week, when the band of thirty played prominent parts in two productions. Maurice Tourneur engaged the band for a number of scenes which were made at the studio and Director E. Mason Hopper who is filming the "Edgar" series used the thirty musicians under the leadership of Bert Crossland for a parade through the streets of Ocean Park and Venice, scenes of which were taken for the initial "Edgar" story.

Victor Schertzinger, who went east to direct Mabel Normand, has returned to the coast and is working with the scenario department in the preparation of Miss Normand's next vehicle. The star will arrive about January tenth and everything will be in readiness at that time for the filming of her next film.

National Studios

OFFICERS of the National Film Corporation of America have made extensive plans for improving their producing plant in Hollywood and expect to spend approximately $200,000 in new buildings, stages and equipment within the next three months.

One of the first improvements to be made will be that of the erection of a new administration building immediately in front of the present one on Lodi street. At the same time, a combination light and dark stage will be put in construction and plans are being drawn for the erection of an electric power plant. The work of these improvements has already been started under the direction of Production Manager Isadore Bernstein, and is progressing without interference with production activities at the studios.

Continuity is now being prepared for the film version of "Mary Minds Her Business," which will be an adaptation from the George Weston serial story of the same name which appeared in The Ladies' Home Journal. Mildred Considine prepared the screen version and a cast of exceptional talent is being engaged for this picture. The National Comedy Company, making two-reel subjects for Goldwyn, has completed two more releases featuring Neal Burns, which have been titled "Treat 'Em Rough," and "A Sleepless Night."

The work of producing "The Kentucky Colonel," under the direction of William A. Seiter, is progressing most satisfactorily with a cast that includes J. J. Dowling, Francis MacDonald, Elinor Field, Lloyd Bacon, Little Thelma Salter, Gordon Griffith and Fred Kohler. The screen version was prepared from the Opie Read book by L. V. Jefferson. The recent announcement by National that J. J. Dowling is to play the title role, brought thirty offers for the productions, according to Isadore Bernstein, manager of Productions.

Christmas cheer was added to the employees of the National Studios by the distribution of more than $2,000 by Captain Harry M. Rubey, president of the company. Mrs. Robert Jackson, who has been with the National since its organization, serving in a confidential capacity to the president, has retired, owing to ill health.

Plans have been made for the filming of a serial featuring Jack Hoxie, under the direction of Murdock MacQuarrie, which will be titled, "The Son of Tarzan." It will be remembered the National produced the first Tarzan picture which was released by First National under the title of "Tarzan of the Apes."

Hampton

THE completion of the new Jesse D. Hampton Studio, to such an extent as to make possible the several producing units beginning work there, was celebrated this week by the completion of the Blanche Sweet release "Simple Souls," which was directed by Robert Thornby. This adaptation from the John Hastings Turner story by Fred Myton, gives Miss Sweet a number of different roles and characterization, the gamut extending from that of a London shop-girl to that of a duchess. One of the important characters in the story is Sid Doyle, and after numerous efforts to find someone to fit the part, Jesse D. Hampton discovered a scene painter, who has every appearance of "Sid" and so the scene painter became an actor. Included in the notable cast are Herbert Grimwood, Charles Meredith, Herbert Standing, Kate Lester, Mayme Kelso, Aaron Edwards and Fred Huntley. Many of the scenes for this were taken aboard a Los Angeles' millionaire's yacht, but it was necessary to build a salon at the studio in replica of the one on the yacht, which was 108 feet long and had a width of 26 feet.

William Desmond has completed his work in the Dan Hart melodrama, "The Parish Priest," under the direction of Joseph Franz, and the H. B. Warner subject, "The White Dove," has been completely filmed. It will take several days for the Jesse D. Hampton Company to become thoroughly installed at the new producing studio and then all three companies will begin upon new subjects.

Universal Newsettes

A number of Universal directors will start the New Year on new productions as the past week has seen no less than five films completed. Tod Browning, who has been working for a number of weeks on the Turkish story by H. H. VanLoan, has completed "The Beautiful Beggar," which starred Priscilla Dean. Tsura Aoki, who has been playing under the direction of Christie Cabanne in "The Burnt Wings," has finished in this and will next play in "A Tokio Siren."

Douglass Gerrard has made the last scenes for "The Forged Bride", which stars Mary MacLaren and Allen Holubar has shipped "The Gorgeous Canary," which starred Dorothy Phillips.

An accident befell Art Accord this week which will prevent work of the serial company which he heads for a number of weeks. In a riding scene with Mildred Moore, in which both were on the same horse, the animal reared on concrete pavement, slipped and fell. Accord lifted Miss Moore to safety but was unable to slide from the horse before it fell. The bones of one of Accord's legs were broken by the weight of the horse.

David Butler, who has been seen in a number of very successful plays in which he appeared as leading man, following his discovery by Griffith and his initial screen appearance in "Hearts of the World," has been signed by Universal for a long term and will be starred. His first starring vehicle will be "The Girl in the Mirror."

President Carl Laemmle, who arrived at the coast last week, for conferences with General Manager Tarkington Baker, has made no statement respecting changes by Universal in any respect regarding the 1920 policy. He is still to be seen daily at Universal City.

The working script for "The Better Half," which is to star Mary MacLaren is ready for productions and Phil Rosen will be in charge of directing this which is his first initial feature picture.

The wedding of two Universal employees was consummated December 27 when Wilson Leahy of the laboratories and Elsie Lewenger, secretary of Charles Hertzman, head of the Publicity Department, were quietly married in Hollywood.

Neilan Studio

MARSHALL NEILAN has rented space at the Douglas Fairbanks studio for the filming of many scenes of his second First National release, and is now engaged in filming scenes at this plant. No announcement has been made respecting the title of Mr. Neilan's second release. The scenario for it was written by Marion Fairfax. Matt Moore was especially engaged to play the lead and arrived here from New York several weeks ago. Opposite Moore will be Margery Dawn. Neilan also has arranged a very good part in this picture for Wesley Barry, the freckled face boy, who made his first appearance of consequence in the performance of "Daddy Long Legs." Others in the cast are Betty Bouton, Tom Guise, Adele Farrington and Thomas Jefferson. Co-directing with Mr. Neilan, in the making of this film, is Victor Heerman, who has been with this producer since he organized his company. Heerman formerly directed comedy and was responsible for the making of a number of Mack Sennett and other well known and successful comedies.

Mr. Neilan has especially engaged Christine Mayo for one of the most important parts in this second of his First National productions. Miss Mayo has appeared in a number of very successful pictures following her career on the speaking stage.

THE PUTTEES QUEST

The star reporter had a wild goose chase this week when he attempted to find Reginald Barker in search of definite information regarding Puttees. Barker, it was learned, had tramped all over the eighteen thousand acre ranch Tom Ince built a studio on, and so it was expected he was in position to shed some light on the momentous question of who wore puttees first.

But the scribe, failing to find Barker, never thought of asking anyone else about the question and so returned with his reporter's note book untarnished, and his pencil still sharp. As an interviewer, the reporter proved himself to be fine talking machine machine with a broken spring.

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

The new catalog of the Howells Cline Equipment Company is an excellent example of the correct way to invade foreign markets. This catalog—printed in three languages—contains a selected list of American made equipment covering as the Howells slogan says "Everything from the Street to the Sheet."

With Joe Hornstein in charge of the equipment, the Howells C. E. Co. should have no trouble wherever their material goes.

Someone arises to inquire if the Howells slogan will be equally alliterative in Czecho-Slovakia or Zambesian. Frankly we don't know how it will sound but we are willing to wager a copy of last year's NEWS that it will look like the product of a stammering linotype machine.

A. W. Olson, formerly secretary to the Assistant Director of Personnel, Organization and Finance at the War Risk Bureau, Washington, has accepted a position with the Typhoon Fan Company.

Saw J. C. Kroesen of the Edison Lamp Works the other day. Wasn't saying much audibly but his enigmatic smile suggested a lot. It looks as if there would be something doing soon to interest the advocates of incandescent projection.

These are the days of calendars and pocket diaries. Hope you've received your share. It's easy to find a place for the calendars but a man's pockets will hold only so many little fat pocket diaries. However—we all like to get 'em.

And say—don't forget to look at the first ad on the new "Rotary" portable projector. It should be in this issue.

The ad can't tell everything, so we're printing a detailed description in next week's issue. Exclusive in the NEWS. Those who thought the Geneva Star had been practically standardized will have something to look forward to.

Last Week We Met—H. F. O'Brien

KALAMAZOO — the "Direct to You" town — is where O'Brien first noticed the poor regulation of the town's lighting system. Ever since then he has been working day after day in an endeavor to correct similar troubles.

Really and truly, and after everything has been said in favor of the town by its publicity agent, you can't blame Harold for leaving the place. As the atlas says, "Kalamazoo is known for its stove and range manufactories, its celery farms and its state insane asylums." Whether or not the last feature is caused by the combination of the other two it is not for us to say. But we are sure that placed in a similar position we would do as O'Brien did—leave town.

Long about the tender age of twelve, in the fall of the year, when the celery was being whitened, parlor stoves were being shipped out and the asylums were being filled with heads of families who had been made poor in an attempt to give their wives and children a summer vacation, Master H. F. O'Brien trekked it for California.

As he slid off the Overland Limited in the Los Angeles station the first object he spied was the tower of the Los Angeles Polytechnic High School. Four years later he had gone through this school of learning from boiler room to weather-vane. A few years spent in Central Station work taught him how the laboring man feels towards Capital. From there he entered the offices of Westinghouse Company, working up from the lowliest clerk to his present status as—Expert on Motion Picture Studio Equipment.

While O'Brien was in the Service Department of the Westinghouse Company he was thrown into frequent contact with the studios. The work became more interesting to him, and having made a study of its requirements he naturally managed to corral considerable of the studio business in electrical equipment and supplies. As the result he was promoted to the Sales Department to handle Theatres and Studios exclusively.

The question of balanced circuits has ever been one of the troubles of the studio electrician. Various methods have been employed or suggested to solve the trouble. But nothing was quite right until O'Brien came along and with the aid of a couple of practical electricians gathered together three units and constructed the first three-unit generator set for studio use. Since that time this scheme has come into universal application, showing that the idea was founded on the right theory—O'Brien's theory.

Some weeks ago O'Brien came to New York to see the Eastern studios. For a fortnight he moseyed about town, finding himself welcome wherever he went.

As for himself—O'Brien is a quite unassuming chap, with a manner that makes him popular with all. His personality, together with the kind of knowledge with which he has armed himself and the personal service he gives to his clients, are the factors that have made him the studio authority of the motion picture group in Los Angeles. After being favored with a visit by him, we trust that he finds time to make another soon. The industry can use a number of men like him.

Equipment Operating — Projection — Questions Answered

The Transverter—What it is, How it Works, How it Differs from Others, and What it Does

A Complete Article on This Device with Dependable Data from a Personal Test

After the load had been varied from normal to over load and back to no load, the field rheostat was altered to give 40 amps. at normal voltage. Similar readings were taken. These are given in the middle column of the table.

And, lastly, a normal voltage, 30 amp. setting was made and readings taken. The figures of this third test make up the right-hand column.

Using the figures thus obtained, the curves shown in Fig. — were plotted. Those readers who have not had practice in curve reading may prefer to study the bare figures, but others will be interested in the curves as plotted.

We are principally interested in the 50 amp. 55 volt curve, as that is the normal characteristic for the machine under test. The shape of this curve explains what happens when the second arc is struck and both are burning simultaneously.

Suppose, for instance, we have started the machine and have struck Arc No. 1. The generator builds up voltage until an arc stream of 55 volts is reached. Now, look to the left where the figures representing voltages have been placed. Follow up from zero until 55 is reached. Follow horizontally to the right until you touch the curve at the place marked "B." It is at this identical spot that your machine is now operating. But possibly you wish to find what current the generator should be delivering. To do this drop straight down from point "B" and read the number of amperes. It is found to be 50, which is as it should be, since the transverter under test is a 55 V. 50 amp. machine.

Now, what happens when the second arc is struck? Here again the curve explains everything. When the carbons of Arc No. 2 are brought together, struck and drawn apart, there is an attempt on the part of the voltage to force current through the arcs. The voltage increases as the carbons are drawn apart until the normal setting is reached. We then have two arcs in series; the current being the same through both arcs circuit and the voltage twice normal.

With one arc our voltage was 55. With two arcs it will be 110. Follow up the figures at the left which indicate voltages until 110 is reached. Then travel horizontally to the curve. The point arrived at is marked "B." This is the place at which our machine is now performing. To find the current, act as before. Drop straight down from point "A" and read the figure, which is found to be 55 amperes.

Those who have handled a transverter have noticed how the voltage rises if the arc is left along, while the current remains practically stationary. This feature is also explained by the curves.

Suppose that the arc is struck and adjusted to its best position, which for purposes of illustration we will say is where the voltage is 55 and the amperage 50. Once adjusted the arc is allowed to burn without attention. As the length of the arc stream increases the potential difference across the arc becomes greater. The voltage rises to 60, and then to 65 and 70. Because of the load characteristic of the transverter this increase in voltage affects the current but slightly. That part of the curve over which the machine operates is practically a straight line. For instance, starting with 50 amps. at the 55 volt mark, an increase of ten volts means a difference of 3 amperes. At 80 volts, the amperage would have increased by only 5. This does not mean that the projectionist could set his arc and let it run without attention until the voltage reached 80 or thereabouts. First, he would have trouble because his spot would work out of position, and, secondly, when his voltage got to 70 or 80 it would become a difficult one to handle, and would give poor results on the screen. But this peculiarity of the transverter is given here merely to point out one feature of its design which makes it different from some other motor generator sets.

In endeavoring to explain the actions of the transverter by the shape of the curves, it will have been noticed that only the curve for normal operation was considered. This was done for the sake of simplicity. The two other curves are given here in the event that the user has a 50 amp. double arc machine from which he is drawing but 30 or 40 amperes. Practically the only difference is in the general shape of the curves, and the change that appears is favorable to the machine. In proof of this it will be noted that the sections of the 30 amp.

and 40 amp. curves over which the Transverter normally operates are nearer a straight line than the 50 amp. curve. This would indicate that as the carbons burned away and the gap lengthened the current would remain steady over a considerable range of voltage.

There is no need in concluding this article, to make the statement that the Transverter is indorsed by this department. The favorable reports which have been received from projectionists who have operated the machines day in and day out are worth more as recommendations. Suffice it to say that we were much impressed by its performance, and particularly the ease with which it can be handled. There is a minimum of parts and accessories; it requires no ballast resistance; it is practically foolproof; its size and vertical design mean that it is eminently suited to the under-size projection room which from observation we should judge comprise about 90 per cent. of the projection rooms now in use; it is well constructed and care enough is used in its assembly to insure a long life provided it is used in a manner befitting it importance.

We wish to thank the manufacturers of th Transverter for the courtesies extended to us whil making the tests and also for the loan of illustrations to accompany the report.

As any one who has had anything to do wit electrical apparatus will admit, the manufacturer of the Transverter were open-handed in their dealings when they allowed an outsider to select an stock machine and test it for efficiency, knowing that the figures thus obtained would be widel published among those who would base their opinions of the machine on the results obtained. Ever the best made of electrical machines will have differences in raw materilas such that no two will have exactly the same efficiency.

To projectionists we would say that we have endeavored to cover all the points which may have arisen in their minds concerning this machine. If, however, we have failed to satisfy their wants we will be pleased to take up any detail and enlarge upon it in so far as it may be possible.

Introducing -the newest Projection Machine

The Heart of "the Rotary"

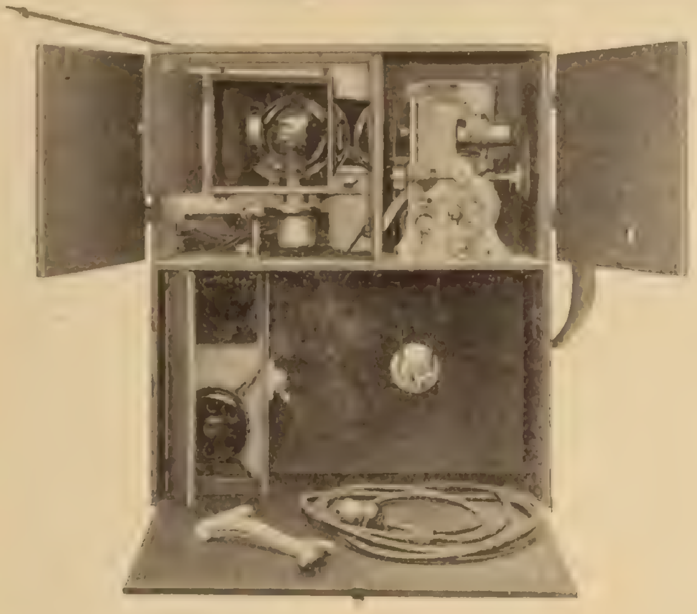
An improvement in motion picture mechanism is found in the new "Rotary" presser movement, which replaces the present-day "geneva" or "star-and-cam" device.

The "Rotary" is so original in design, so simple in construction and so successful in operation, that comparisons are interesting and enlightening. For example, the usual "star-and-cam" has TEN wearing surfaces, in direct comparison with the TWO simple bearings of the "presser" movement.

In the "Rotary" presser mechanism, the film is treated as a continuous ribbon. Sprockets and sprocket-holes are disregarded; the film is gently PUSHED down—picture by picture—by the CONTINUOUS application of the revolving presser to the entire width of the film.



"The Rotary"
Portable Projector

—"The size and weight of a suitcase; the strength and quality of a professional machine"—with exclusive, patented features that are in advance of every mechanism. Easiest to thread and operate; the projector for portable use.

Poet-Projectionist

YOU have heard that oft repeated line that poets like projectionists are born into the world for a different career, but fate in the form of an employment agency, the high cost of shoes or the low temperature of the weather has different ideas and acts accordingly.

Well, when we opened this morning's mail there was a letter on the top that toppled over into our hands as if it was eager to be read.

The letter contained a poem from a projectionist in good standing. We looked it over—whistled a couple of times through our teeth—and decided to print it right then and thereabouts.

Without further eulogy, apology or doxology we hereby serve it to you, knowing that you will give is as good treatment as we have accorded it.

Lines to an Operator

When you enter a picture show
Do you ever stop to think
Of the man in the room overhead,
That makes the picture go.

He's up there doing his level best
For the patrons day by day
But some folks think he's a failure
If mishaps come his way.

For when your interest deepens
In a play that is shown on the screen
And something happens—the picture stops
You become haughty as a queen.

Right away you conclude he's a failure,
The white screen itself is the proof
But no one knows the equipment
He has in his hole near the roof.

* * * *

The show is now over and homeward you go
And to friends you slur that picture show
You blame the man behind the machine
But the real true cause you never know.

Is Making Home-Made Camera

M. H. Thoreau, Victoria, B. C.:

Just a few questions regarding a M. P. camera. Could I use a Powers or Simplex movement in a M. P. Camera? What is the speed of the average camera movement? Seems to me that a good M. P. Camera lens (with iris diaphragm) used in conjunction with a projector movement could be used to make an amateur M. P. Camera. What's your opinion? Couldn't I get a much wider shutter opening with a projector movement than is usual with a M. P. Camera, thus allowing the lens to be stopped down to gain better definition.

My plan is to use a projector movement and gate (made light proof of course) with a shutter geared direct to the cam shaft and running between the lens and the aperture.

In the issue of September 20th, R. V. Plew asks what is wrong with his motor when it won't start but when given a turn in either direction will run in that direction. You say "high mica" but in my opinion that is impossible. I am pretty sure that Plew has a single phase A. C. induction motor and that the starting contacts are not making good connection or there is a break in the wires feeding the contactors. If he cannot repair it himself or cannot get it repaired if he will push button across the two wires which feed the contactors he will find that by turning on the juice and giving the button a touch that the motor will start as usual. Caution—Don't press the button too long or don't leave current on when motor is not running.

In the same issue Lewis Garvin, Columbia, Ky., complains that the so-called "city projectionists" blames the country operator for all the punch marks and torn up film. I don't believe the average city projectionist does anything of the sort as many of them often run damaged film which they know has only been run in the city. But they also receive film which has been in the country which is in much worse condition.

Your correspondent also says that the City man should come out in the country and see some of the stuff his city brothers send out. If this "country operator" (That's what he calls himself) will just come into the exchanges in the City and see some of the film that has come in from the country with mis-framed splices, unscraped splices, splices made with nails, pins, common paste and glue, gummed paper, together with the numerous scratches, titles, reversed and a hundred other things he will no longer wonder why his country brothers get the majority of the credit for film damage.

A correspondent also says "I am a small town operator and I think that some of these Expert Projectionists, as they call themselves are nothing only operators just like myself, operating for a living."

Well the city Projectionists are at least up to date they use the name for their profession which has been adopted by the Society of M. P. Engineers, Projector Manufacturers, Projection Departments and the industry in general. Come On "Columbia," call yourself a "projectionist" even if you are only a "country operator."

He says he has been operating for eight years and thinks he knows more about a machine than some of the city projectionists receiving from $25 to $50 per week. This is very possible but if he is as slow in other ways as he has shown himself to be regarding the title "projectionist" I'll bet it applies mostly to the $25 variety.

Now Garvin don't think this is a personal dig because you may and in all probability are a better projectionist than the majority of the so-called "city" men but please don't think that just because your film arrives from the exchange in bad condition that it was a city projectionist that caused the trouble.

I admit that city projectionists damage many feet of film as the majority of the film I receive has only been run in 4 or 5 cities between Winnipeg and here (one house in each place) and some of it certainly has had some hard usage considering the short time it has been in use.

I would like to ask W. B. Allen of Edmonton, Alberta what the condition is of the film he receives. He runs a good deal of the stuff that I do and gets it about half way from its release in Winnipeg to its running here. Then we might be able to locate who uses the X's for change over signs and cuts off fade-outs at the end of the reels.

Some of it shows treatment that is unusual to say the least.

I am enclosing a few samples taken from "Bill Apperson's Boy" (Jack Pickford—First National). Someone is using this punch mark on most of the best pictures of all the large exchanges. There are about 4 holes at the end of each reel. Sometimes at fade outs etc., where a change over is very simple.

I have a M. P. Camera lens marked Urban Special 2 inch. Could you give me from this meagre information any idea as to whether it might be any good or not? Don't laugh, I just want to know if this style lens ever was a first class article and what their speed is. I realize that you couldn't tell me it was a good one without seeing and testing it but I thought if there was any chance of its being any good I might try to have an iris diaphragm fitted to it. Where could I get this done.

M. H. T.

Reply:

Yes, you could use a Simplex or Powers intermittent movement in a motion picture camera of your own make if you wished to do so. We understand that there are a few commercial cameras (generally for somewhat special purposes) in which one of these movements is used. When they are made use of, it is to get the rapid "pull down." The average camera movement is a "fifty-fifty" or 1-1. There is no reason that we can see, why a good M. P. lens used in conjunction with a projector movement should not produce a very decent amateur camera.

The present cameras allow a shutter opening of 180° which is the equivalent of a 1/32 second exposure with a one-to-one movement of the crank. This allows an equal time for the pull-down. In the projector with, say, a 5-1 movement the time allotted for the pull-down is approximately 1/90 of a second. If a movement as rapid as this were required the camera makers would have incorporated it in their designs. But the proof of excellence in picture making is present in every high class film marketed in this country—and in every case a shutter less than 180° was used, with the lens stopped down to f.16 or thereabouts depending of course on local conditions.

Perhaps some of the experimenters who read these columns have worked on the kind of camera suggested by Mr. Thoreau and will be glad to give him and the rest of us the benefit of their results.

We are glad to see you get in on the discussion of "city vs. country" and the stand you have taken is to your credit. Although all the letters are interesting it is to be feared that in a great majority of cases the man who is setting forth his views becomes so absorbed in defending his particular crowd against the arguments of his opponents that his language over-reaches itself. We have had occasion to delete some classic diatribes before sending letters to the press.

Yes, let's hear from W. B. Allen. He has kept silent for too many weeks. It must be that he is getting ready to spring something new.

We have inquired about that Urban Special lens and find that it was made for the Urban Camera. It was a very good lens with a speed of about f.3.5. You would probably have very good luck by using it with an iris diaphragm. Try it out.

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Chicago's Ventilation Expert Signs with Typhoon Fan

MR. T. R. WILSON, who for the past six years has been connected with and lately in charge of the well-known Chicago Health Department's Division of Ventilation, has left to accept a position as Chicaco representative of the Typhoon Fan Company's new offices at 64 West Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. Wilson testing air motion by ammonium chloride apparatus

Mr. Wilson's experience in the cooling, heating and ventilation field has indeed been widely varied. His earliest work was done in tunnel ventilation where for five years his work covered the entire category of tunnel construction from pressure work, where twenty-five pounds pressure above atmosphere was used, to hard rock tunnels driven two hundred feet below the surface of Lake Michigan. At the completion of this work the City of Chicago having under way the organization of the first Ventilation Division of any municipality, he accepted service in this Division, and up to the time of his joining the force of the Typhoon Fan Company, he filled all the positions in that Division up to Chief.

Motion picture theatre owners as well as projectionists, who are using Westinghouse Mazda Lamps for motion picture projection, are highly elated with the results.

Not only does the use of this light source mean better pictures and therefore more pleased patrons, but it also means a considerable saving in dollars and cents in the operating cost. Furthermore it does away with the injurious carbon gas and dust produced by carbon arc lamps, and simplifies projection.

Write for pamphlet which describes in detail the use as well as the advantages of these lamps.

Explaining Many of the Technical Problems of the Assistant Cameraman

By William Barbarin Laub

There may be a bit of action to be played in some portion of a scene that no light would enter in reality. In the full view of the set the audience can see that the place you are going to show in a close-up is cut off from all light, or at least, we must always credit any audience with intelligence enough to be observing of any slip. The thing to do is to improvise some definite reason for light to enter and illuminate your subject and be certain that it is entirely logical. There should be a reason for every light used in artificial lighting else we'll show light with no source and render its artificiality very evident. It is so easy to show that a heavily canopied bed is equipped with a small electric reading lamp and then we can use an overhead spot shooting down on Mary as if from the tiny lamp.

At one time, all lighting was flat lighting, that is, from behind the camera and perhaps a little from each side, but never in front of the lens. One of the best cinematographers in the business was almost fired from the Vitagraph staff the first time he shot a scene with the sun in front of him. He claims to have discovered back-lighting. However, he was the pioneer in the motion picture business. Back-lighting had never been done in the hurtling illustrations and the rule was, "Sun over your shoulder always, preferably the left." Why the "left" we don't know, but probably because the right was considered unlucky far back in such medieval times.

This resulted in flat effects, that is, subjects did not stand out from the backgrounds and "round" effects were never seen. The simplest way to observe a round effect is to place a spherical object produced by the graduation of light from the bright side to the dark side. In motion picture on a table near a window and note the roundness work, direct or flat lighting is always avoided if possible. In the studio, flood illumination of a scene is given over to banks in front of a set and on an open side of a set and banks overhead unless domes are used. Auxiliary lights for strong side lights are usually arcs, either used as hard lights or used with diffusers to mould soft shadows on figures and create round effects or stereoscopic effects.

Broadsides and spots also shoot in from windows and doors in the back of a scene and often an electrician atop the back wall plays a spot on the star every moment during the action of a scene. The accompanying diagram is from the writer's note book in which methods of various cameraman have been recorded, and in passing, let me recommend the keeping of such notes on the work of others for many times valuable things will be learned. You may call this "stealing light effects" but if you caught someone making notes on your own lighting efforts you'd be all swelled up with conceit. Observe in the diagram the various uses of lights. It is a long set and is being shot from an angle that will make it appear longer than it actually is because of perspective. Two overhead domes are supplying top light, where the most important action is to occur. However, overhead banks are preferred by most cameramen unless the set is to be lighted for "night" and we want spots, shooting through windows are backlighting characters in the scene. One, in the hands of an electrician is mounted on the back wall of the set.

The treatment a star needs in order to photograph to the best advantage is only determined by experience with that particular star and by tests. Often a player can tell a new cameraman just how he or she has always been "lighted" but too often, they are apt to have ideas of their own which are not at all practical. No experienced cameraman will allow anyone to tell him how to use his lights unless he knows a star is honestly helping him by describing successful methods as applied by the man who preceded him. No time would be wasted and no ground uselessly covered if every player would make an intelligent study of lighting methods as successfully applied to themselves and pass on such information to each new photographer.

The player would certainly profit by this for incorrect lighting will absolutely ruin the appearance of many stars, especially women.

Personal characteristics too demand special treatment. There are well-known stars whose profiles are terrible but who will "photograph front-face like a million dollars" as cameraman say. Others have skin or natural complexions which will simply "eat" light and their cameramen have to "burn them up" with hard lighting for otherwise they always photograph very dark. Others require much less light because of a natural bloodless complexion which with strong illumination, reflects more light than it absorbes. Some, because of the ravages of Father Time, require very exacting makeup and careful lighting and one motion picture actress of great beauty and rare ability uses almost every color in the spectrum in making up for she is on the off side of fifty—but still plays young girl parts. Tests and careful study of a star's characteristics should be made. A knowledge of lights and lighting methods enables one to analyze effects seen on the screen.

Reflectors are often used in interior work for often a cameraman can control reflected light more easily than the direct light from a lamp or else, there are times when only a reflector can be used in a small place to produce a back light. On outdoor stages unequipped with lights of any kind, mirrors take the place of spot lights and there has been stage work done on far off locations where there was no electricity for miles. Then, mirrors furnished all lighting effects in interior scenes and large aluminum painted reflectors threw light oftentimes from one to another until it landed just where it was wanted. A cameraman should be able to control light perfectly; make it eat out of his hand as it were. One should always work with a lens hood, an outside vignetting attachment in place or something to shade the lens under most conditions.

In studio work it is safest to also use a black velvet screen tall enough to ward off flares from backlights when it is placed near the lens. All lens parts, (inside of the barrel) outside vignetting attachments etc., should be kept carefully painted with a good dull lampblack paint for the tiniest shiny surface such as a screw-head will often reflect a flare into your lens and create all kinds of trouble. That flare of light of course, will register on the negative.

TITLES

The making of titles has in many cases become an expert cameraman's job where special effects are wanted, and there are few pictures made today with printed titles, photographed in a title machine.

Positive film is used in making title negative for the reason that it produces contrasty effects which are desirable in photographing white letters on black cards. Photographing a black title card with white letters will, of course, give us a negative, and the film should be loaded in the camera in the usual way, immulsion side to the lens. But when white title cards with black print are photographed and we wish to make a black letter negative from the first one obtained, the film should be loaded with the celluloid side to the lens. This is because you are going to use the print from your first negative as a "negative" title on which the words must read from left to right when viewed from the celluloid side of the film.

There are times when a scene is wanted on which a spoken title fades in on a dark portion of the scene and remains there for a few feet. It is a mistake to do this with an ordinary title card, no matter how black it may appear nor how dull its finish. Hold the card against a piece of good black velvet and it will almost seem to be grey. The proper way to do such work is to first take the scene and pencil on your focusing screen exactly where the title is to appear and then on the same film, photograph the white letters of the title fastened on a piece of black velvet. If you are expert with pencil and scissors you can cut these letters out yourself, else buy them at any large stationery story.

Film manufacturers either hire title card artists, pay out perfectly good money to title-making concerns or else resort to plain printed cards, all of which involves expense, delays in securing titles and what not, and it seems strange that someone hasn't built a vertical titie machine equipped with a square yard of black velvet. A supply of artistically cut wooden letters could be furnished from the carpenter shop and with these painted a dull white, any title could be "set up" on the black.

New Year Reveals Sun-Light Arc Applied To Many New and Interesting Fields

The Possibilities of This Powerful Light Explained at Length by J. Justice Harmer

SHORTLY after the announcement in last week's NEWS of the new scheme of rentals J. Justice Harmer, president of the corporation explained to a representative of this publication some of his plans for 1920. His statement included an account of the many new fields into which the Sun Light Arc has entered successfully, and while many applications are entirely outside of the motion picture industry they will be of interest because of the technical features involved.

On account of the truthfulness of color rendition the Sun Light Arc has found a wonderful field of usefulness in commercial establishments where color definition rooms are a necessity. Department stores showing valuable colored goods have installed the light for the sole purpose of providing sunlight at all hours of the day.

Because of the fact that the Arc approaches the Sun in its intensity it has been used to fade dyes. Instead of exposing the material to the sun for a considerable length of time it is now possible to accomplish the same work in the matter of a few hours.

Closely analogous to the above is the use of the light in the forced drying of vegetables.

There has been for some time a determined attempt on the part of illuminating engineers to find a way by which athletic sports could be conducted at night on an equal footing with daytime sports. The tired business man could then enjoy his tennis after business hours. Golf courses could be used far into the night without being accompanied by a terrific loss in golf balls. This problem stands fair to be solved by the application of the Sun Light Arc, says Mr. Harmer. He goes on to say that there is no reason why base-ball cannot be played as well, as it is possible to so distribute these powerful light sources that no ball could be driven out of the illuminated zone.

It is easy to appreciate the necessity for perfect illumination in the surgical wards of hospitals. Very often the diagnosis of a specialist depends on the color of tissues. Since the color values of light rays from the Arc duplicate those of true daylight the diagnostician is never in doubt as to the real conditions of affairs.

J. Justice Harmer, Pres., Son-Light Arc Corp.

But here comes a statement that will be of great interest to all in the industry as it applies to projection. The Sun Light Arc Corp. is authority for the statement that they have found a way to apply the powerful and concentrated carbon arc used in their lamps to the projector. This should provide a source of unusual high intensity and an evenly illuminated field.

The use of this arc in the studio of the motion picture producer is ample evidence of its suitability for all photographic processes, including that of photo engraving and lithography. Then there are the mining of coal and metals whereby it will be possible to increase the working time and the output by providing the laborers with a suitable light of correct density and distribution.

But all this seems to be of minor importance when considered beside the announcement of the corporation that they are nearly ready to bring forth a new style of theatrical stage lighting that will be revolutionary. This new scheme does away with the long established footlights which have been thought necessary to the audience but which have without a doubt made the work of the actor more difficult. Just what the technical details are have not as yet been revealed but it is intimated that Sun Light Engineers have long been working on the idea and now feel that they have solved all problems in connection with its universal application. Theatrical producers who have been favored with some of the more general details of the plan have expressed wonderment and have stated that its application will do more to advance the art of the theatre than any other invention in hits generation. No doubt the sponsors will make a public demonstration within a reasonable time.

Music Rolls for Motion Picture Music

The music editor of these columns received a very interesting catalog from the Film Music Company of Los Angeles, Cal., which contains some very interesting facts regarding music for the photoplay.

This concern started several years ago to manufacture music rolls of dramatic music, and their idea has proved to be one of the greatest aids to the motion picture musicians. They do not only manufacture perforated rolls of the best musical literature published, but also issue educational pamphlets from time to time, which in my estimation are unique in construction as well as helpful. Here are several slogans which I noticed while looking through the catalogs.

"Don't use any traps on Features—Except with Comic scenes; and then be modest.

"Forget the telephone bell stuff. It's punk!"

"Don't try to imitate any sounds in the pictures. That would be all right if all sounds were reproduced—But, "movin pichers" are the silent drama and it's th' bunk to pick out a sound here and there and try to imitate it and forget all the rest—

"No—The real art of playing pictures is to play on the same thought or emotion that the actor or actors are expressing.

"In this way you help tell the story.

"If you must use traps, save 'em for slapstick comedies and exit marches, and then go as far as you like."

Some of the latest additions to this excellent catalog are:

"Migonette" by Friml, a dainty intermezzo.

"Hunkatin" by Levy, a half-tone one-step.

"Mysterious Nights," by Berg.

"Dramatic Agitato No. 38, by Minot. Fine for short fights and dramatic climaxes.

"Mandarin Dance" by Kempinski.

"The Pearl of Iberia" by Helmesberger. A bright Spanish intermezzo.

"Serenade Romantique," by Borch, light dramatic.

"Galop No. 7" by Minot.

"Little Serenade" by Grunfeld, a girl theme.

"Ariana" (Waltz) by Don P. Jones.

Every organ and piano player should possess the catalog of the Filmusic Co.

Natiello Orchestra a Great Factor at the Strand Theatre of Louisville, Ky.

NATIELLO'S Symphony Orchestra made its premiere at the Strand theatre, of Louisville, Ky., on December 15th, and the Strand management is to be congratulated for installing this Symphony orchestra under the able leadership of Prof. Natiello. The picture presented at the premiere was "Eyes of Youth," starring Clara Kimball Young, and there is no question but that the Strand management selected a wonderful subject for its grand opening. But the film production in itself, although wonderfully staged, was not the sole factor which established the above theatre as an institution of art, and by no means did it elevate this theatre into the realms of exclusiveness. It was again the wonderful musical accompanim and the unique Natiello interpretation that est lished artistic and unrivaled standard of mot picture presentation.

Short Subjects, Comedies and Other Features Reviewed on This Page

"Nothing But the Truth"

(Taylor Holmes Special Production Released Through Metro—Six Reels)

THE truth concerning "Nothing But the Truth" is fully told in the statement that it is a mildly amusing farce comedy which has been given a good production. Another truth is that we are somewhat disappointed in this picture. So famous a play and so clever a comedian as Taylor Holmes was a combination which held much promise. Just what is wrong with the feature is not entirely apparent unless it is that an attempt has been made to make a heart interest story out of a purely farce comedy idea, and that the star did not reconcile himself to the style of playing necessary to put over this sort of a production. Also the picture seems to lack action which advances the story. There are innumerable scenes where two people meet in the center of the stage to talk to each other on a subject unknown to an audience until titles are flashed, presumably for the most part the lines of the stage play, which explain what is being said. Then, too, these titles are too often comedy which doesn't register for much when deprived of the personality of the actor in speaking them.

Mr. Holmes and a correct cast of types for the principal roles work hard, rather too hard at times since some of the sequences seem forced. The star seems particularly at fault in this connection. Little of the finesse as a comedian to which most of his fame as a screen star is due is in evidence.

Briefly stated, "Nothing But the Truth" is a story of a young man who on a wager tells nothing but the truth for a stated period, during which time he becomes involved in all sorts of trouble, even to being suspected of being a society burglar. In the end everything is explained satisfactorily and he gets the girl of his heart's desire.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"High Speed"

(Hallmark Production—Five Reels—Directed by Charles Miller)

THIS feature contains all the thrills of the old fashioned melo-dramatic pictures which used to excite us so much a few years ago, only the situation and story brings us up to the present time.

For those who care for intense excitement, which will kindle to a high pitch in the last reel, the witnessing of this picture will give the desired feeling. Photography and continuity are up to standard but the story lags in many places, which is due partly to the lack of infusing new ideas and to the direction which seems to take a drop now and then.

And again the cast, comparing it with many of the up to date productions, is not of the strongest. Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette are featured and give a very passable portrayal of the characters entrusted to them.

High power racing cars and the testing of their strength on the track is the feature in which the story is woven around.

Billy Brice, who has been disqualified from the track for "pulling" a race, is engaged by an automobile manufacturer to drive his car in a coming contest. When the manufacturer learns of Billy's disgrace the latter is discharged. Events, however prove his innocence. He enters the race, wins it and also the heart of his employer's daughter.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Red Hot Hottentots"

(Snub Pollard Comedy—One Reel—Rolin Pathe)

"RED HOT HOTTENTOTS" is a burlesque on the methods of that tribe of black people who live somewhere in Africa or the South Sea Islands. It is old material, although it serves its purpose in a comical direction. Snub Pollard happens upon these people and goes through the customary paces such as being frightened to death and threatened with being boiled alive and what not. Snub needs some brand new ideas and then he will strike his stride. And the Rolin forces are capable of giving him some up-to-date patterns. They have proven their originality with the Harold Lloyd releases. This comedy does not generate a great number of laughs because of its moth-eaten idea and the execution. But it is lively and every principal including the star works hard. This fellow Pollard is comical enough to make the picture a pleasing filler for most any theatre.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Fear Market"

(Realart—A January Release)

SOMEONE has said that fear is the least noble, but the strongest and most universal of all human motives. Certainly the first Realart Pictures production to feature Alice Brady in Washington does not deny this observation. In fact, "The Fear Market" plays upon this "least noble motive" until the cows come home, but as a vehicle for Miss Brady these three elements have been combined in just the right proportion to give her one of the best opportunities she has had in recent months.

No one can say that it is not a truly beautiful and wonderful production. It is, as we have said, for certain classes of people. Here, it packed the theater with holiday crowds from early morning until late. Everyone knows its story, which has been heralded from one end of the country to the other as a stage success. Written by Princess Troubetskoy, known to literary circles as Amelie Rives, it portrays each and every type so well known in all dramas wherein scandal takes the lead and fear weaves the plot.

"The Fear Market" is well acted and for that reason will make many friends. Its settings are gorgeous.—KEMPER COWING.

Reviewed at Rialto Theatre,
Washington, D. C.

"The 13th Commandment"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

"THE THIRTEENTH COMMANDMENT" is a strong, real story, particularly timely because of the wave of extravagance which has swept the country during the past year. The story deals with a girl who resolves to earn her own way in life because of the examples of a mother and sister-in-law, who have exceeded their husband's incomes, which have been before her.

This production is bound to please feminists. Practically the only trite incident found in the story is seen in the death in a motor accident of the brother's unfaithful wife and her lover when returning from a night at a road house.

Ethel Clayton does splendid work and the supporting players are cast true to type including Walter Hall, Lucille Ward, Anna Q. Nilson and Irving Cummings.—CHARLOTTE DANTZIG.

Reviewed at the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

"Chicken a la Cabaret"

(Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels—Fox)

THIS comedy is a pot-pourri of about everything that composes a celluloid burlesque. If the spectator is looking for slapstick he can find it; if he is looking for novel stunts he will find them, too; if he expects to see the girls, he will not be disappointed, because they appear very early, attired in costumes calculated to make even a woman-hater sit up and take notice. The idea behind it is an extravagant one and takes up the cause of the Policemen's Benefit, with Chester Conklin acting as the leader of the merry minions. Hampton Del Ruth has conceived enough novel incidents to supply a half-dozen comedies on this pattern.

The night of the Benefit is at hand and all the coppers with their wives are in the audience. On the stage is Billy Armstrong, who is appearing in the role of a magician. Everything goes well until he asks for the officers' watches. Presumably he will turn them into eggs or something. He has a charming confederate and both enter compartments. When they don't appear, the curtains are lifted and the fakirs are absent. They escaped through a trap in the stage. Then the chase is on—a chase which uncovers thrills and humorous incidents. From roof to roof—from precipice to precipice—down fire escapes—up fire escapes—and so on ad infinitum. The girls appear in a cabaret scene in a restaurant, where Harry Booker, Armstrong, Conklin and the other funmakers are seated pior to the Benefit. Conklin is in disguise and his antics here take on a slapstick appearance. The girls have a series of high diving stunts and dance and caper about to the delectation of the guests in the pictures and those out in front.

A fast-moving comedy—one that breezes along continually on high, sending out its assortment of laugh provoking incidents in an original way. Mr. Del Ruth has expended some effort here.—LAURENCE REID.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last fourteen weeks arranged alphabetically as a index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue o MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

"When a Man Loves"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

ENGLISH traditions and Oriental mystery form the background of "When a Man Loves," Vitagraph's delightful five-reeler, which gives Earle Williams an opportunity to make love and win a pseudo Japanese maiden brought up by a curio dealer of Tokio.

The usual parental objections are encountered and obstacles placed in the path of the lovers by an obvious English girl and a Japanese lover. On the return of the bride and groom to England it is discovered that the supposed Japanese girl is the daughter of an old barrister friend of her husband's family, and of course all ends well.

Simple naturalness is one of the charms of this production, which has been given an elaborate English and Japanese setting consistent with the presentation of a convincing tale of English society. It is a splendid family picture, with Earle Williams and the supporting cast doing excellent work.—[illegible]

"Go West, Young Woman!"

(Christie Comedy—Two Reels)

AL CHRISTIE has employed the dream situation and Fay Tincher around this feminine twist of Horace Greeley's memorable advice about the young man who should go West. The comedienne is traveling toward the land of sunsets when she falls asleep and dreams. Like all dream situations the spectator is not "in the know" until the concluding scene. So the comedy is not such a burlesque as it would have been had the events transpired in a world of reality instead of a realm of fancy. Miss Tincher assumes the garb of a moral unlifter even though she wears the clothes of a cow-girl. She enlists a pretty corps of assistants, all of whom are attired in the identical costure, and before you know it the unruly masculine element consisting of derelicts, bartenders, poker players, faro dealers, bandits, and all around good-for-nothings are either chased out of the community or compelled to travel the straight and narrow path.

The action you see, takes place in a Western mining camp. Miss Tincher and her girls mean business since they wield some angry weapons. The climax of the piece is concerned with the capture of the most ferocious bandit in the West. He defies the girls to take him. And though he barricaded himself in his cabin, his rifle is so true that some of their masculine escorts bite the dust. Miss Fay, however, is courageous enough to tackle him single-handed. She smokes him out by throwing sulphur down the chimney and lassoes him in quick order. The concluding scenes present a humorous gun-play between the star and the sheriff, and the inevitable awakening from the dream. The picture gets off to a slow start and it is not punctuated with spontaneous humor until nearly the finish. However, it breezes through with sufficient strength to please the average patron. Miss Tincher has some comical moments and she works with her customary ease. The titling is snappy and bright.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Log of the U-35"

(C. B. Price—Two Reels)

HERE is a picture which no exhibitor can afford to miss. It is one of the most remarkable short subjects that have ever come from the screen, being no less than an authentic account of the ruthlessness of the Germans on the high seas, and particularly of the U-35. The captain of the submarine was authorized by his government to take motion pictures of the work of destruction, and these prints came into possession of the Allies at the termination of the war. The U-35 certainly set a record in ruthless tactics. It accounted for no less than twenty ships and captured five English captains.

The scenes are impressive and thrilling. You look upon a three-master gliding gracefully along the water and the next minute with its stern pointing to heaven, plunging to the depths. Some of the ships put up a battle but the odds are all against them and they go the same way as the schooner. And when the U-35 captain is finished with his deadly work he sends a wireless to Berlin concerning his accomplishments. This picture is creating a sensation wherever shown and every exhibitor should find a place for it on his program. It is good enough to be featured. Spectators can look at interesting close-ups of German ruthlessness during the war.—LAURENCE REID.

"He Ain't Done Right by Our Nell"

(Mutt and Jeff Comedy—One Reel—Fox)

HERE they are in a satire of old time melodrama where the villain was accustomed to ruin little Nell and the parents were bowed with deep "sorrer" over their che-i-i-l-l-d. The inseparable freaks are lounging on a park bench, presenting an appearance of down-and-outers, when the manager of the show that is to play at the 'opry house chances along and offers them positions in the company. The real actors had struck that morning. Well, it is quite comical to see Mutt doubling in brass, as it were. He plays the hero as well as the desperate villain. Of course the freaks jazz everything, as they usually do. The scenery topples over and the eager thespians forget their lines. Yet they succeed in working upon the tear ducts of their audience, or rather their work is so vigorous that little Nell is forced to cry, thus arousing the house to lachrymose expression.

The gallery gods cry so hard at the plight of Nellie that the tears mount in volume and tumbling over the railing, nearly drown the two-piece orchestra. Like the old time melodramas specialties are introduced between

We are next introduced to Grandfather Shuggart of Cohutta, Georgia, who solved the servant problem at the close of the Civil War by using the revolving waiter. This is nothing more or less than a good sized roulette wheel placed on the dining-room table and the food whirled around until you get the portions you want. Old grandpa is still using it. The invention is more of a novelty than anything else. Still it might work in a boarding house, thus keeping the star boarder from helping himself too freely. The other guests could keep the old board revolving. Letter Laughs give us excerpts from letters received by the government during the war. Most of the illiteracy is found in the substitution of the wrong word rather than misspelling. Spittoon is used in place of platoon. One or two are rather humorous, the majority being quite dull. The Futurist Movies concludes the Magazine and introduces HOWLING Billy Sunday of SWEET DRY AND DRY fame.—LAURENCE REID.

"THE WILLOW TREE"

(SCREEN CLASSIC-METRO)

An Original and Fantastic Tale of Japan

SO fanciful and fantastic a tale is this latest starring vehicle of Viola Dana's that it is scarcely possible to judge its entertainment value with audiences.

The story is unusual and highly original and were it not for the fact that one of its principal sequences is without a foundation of logic, it might be termed one of the hits of the year. This, however, will probably not detract to any great extent from its pleasing qualities. Perhaps a greater fault in the eyes of an audience is the use of many titles in which the words "honorable" and "august" are badly overworked and which are stilted in construction unless one is to assume that the people of Japan use so much excess verbiage in speaking.

The atmosphere of Japan is sufficiently realistic to register with the average and the production has been surrounded with much scenic vesture. Miss Dana's role does not present any great acting possibilities. She makes up rather well as a Japanese girl and is supported by a very capable cast, many of whom are real "Japs." The story is one of a Japanese girl who loses her heart to an Englishman and with whom she enacts a role which corresponds in many instances to that of an ancient legend of her country concerning the "willow tree princess." It strikes us as being well out of the ordinary and therefore entitled to attention for that reason if no other.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Adapted from the play of J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes by June Mathis.

Directed, Henry Otto. Supervision by Maxwell Karger.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Viola Dana, dainty Metro star is the attraction at the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement, beginning ———.

Her vehicle for this engagement is "The Willow Tree," a screen adaptation of the successful play of the old and new Japan, written by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes and which enjoyed an extended run on Broadway some seasons past.

All the dramatic material of the play has been brought to the picture and in addition it possesses a wonderful scenic value, the quality of which is seldom presented outside the educational field.

Miss Dana plays the role of a Japanese girl, daughter of an image maker, who would sell her in marriage to a rich merchant that he may send his son to an American University. She has lost her heart to a young Englishman who is making an indefinite stay in her country and runs away from her home and to that of the young man. It is an interesting and fantastic tale which has been evolved with an unusually original plot carrying suspense and action in every scene. In support of Miss Dana is a strong cast of players, among which is Edward Connelly famous for his portrayal of Japanese characters. Miss Dana makes up well to the character of the "willow tree princess." The play is picturesque and pleasing throughout.

PROGRAM READER

"The Willow Tree" is the interesting sounding title of an interesting new picture in which Viola Dana is starred which will be the attraction at this theatre beginning ———.

The locale of the picture is Japan and many of the characters are Japanese, including that of Pell Trenton who plays a young Englishman who is sojourning in the Orient because of a love affair which has been disappointing.

Here Miss Dana, as the daughter of an image maker, falls in love with him and events transpire which are coincident with those related in the telling of an old Japanese legend concerning the "willow tree princess."

Scenically this is perhaps one of the most beautiful pictures ever released. It however is to be chiefly recommended for its unique, fanciful story of romance in the land of flowers. Acting honors are about equally divided between the star and Edward Connelly famous for his portrayal of Oriental characters. Mr. Connelly has the role of the image maker.

SUGGESTIONS

"The Willow Tree" is based on a successful play produced by Cohan and Harris and therefore should command first place in your billing unless Miss Dana is popular enough so you choose to sell her above all else. Next should come the cast of characters for whom you may promise an excellent performance, especially Mr. Connelly.

Like all pictures of the Orient, this feature presents unusual opportunity for attractive lobby display and for decoration of the theatre with the employees in costume.

So far as style of display is concerned the "blossoms," Chinese lanterns, etc., are to be recommended. If you are to play this picture where willow tree branches are available, you have in them a medium of decorations which would be remarkably inexpensive and also very tasty. Those who will play the feature in Northern climes may best carry out the usual Oriental idea.

CATCH LINES

Her "august" father decreed that she was to marry a wealthy merchant but she rebelled and ran away. Then followed a series of events which might be implied that she was a re-incarnation of the "willow tree princess."

According to a legend of old Japan a princess came from the Gods to a ancient warrior, through the medium of the willow tree. Centuries later pretty O-riu daughter of the image maker lived the events told in the legend as happening to the princess.

In the land of flowers, amid the traditions of dutiful daughters to their parents lived pretty O-riu daughter of the image maker. The father decreed that she should marry the wealthy old merchant but she rebelled. Then came a reincarnation of the "willow tree princess" as told by each generation of Japan's people.

"History repeats itself" may well summarize this fanciful and fantastic romance of the land of flowers.

"THE VALLEY OF TOMORROW"

AMERICAN-PATHE

William Russell in Story of Vengeance and Love

"THE VALLEY OF TOMORROW" is primarily a story of vengeance, softened in its closing scenes by the introduction of a love element which emerges from the turmoil of cross-motives and conflicting circumstances. The narrative deals with the efforts of a faction of mountaineers—the Morgans—to avenge the betrayal and death of one of their women folks at the hands of an unscrupulous foreigner, named Colonna. Dabney Morgan, brother of the girl, sets out resolved to "get" his sister's betrayer at all costs. In the ensuing events he becomes infatuated with the sister of the man whose death he is seeking and in the end finds himself impelled on one side to fulfill the "duty" he owes to his own sister's outraged memory and overmastered on the other hand by his new-found love for the Colonna girl, the sister of his intended victim. In the role of Dabney Morgan, William Russell is afforded an opportunity to display dramatic action and tense emotion. He does both in a finished manner.

The production embodies plenty of action, and it possesses an element of suspense that balances any flaws of improbability in the story. The camera has caught some remarkably pretty settings in the mountainous districts of Lake Tahoe and the Truckee River. The types, too, are generally well-fitted to the members of the cast. Finally, the happy ending, while propelled somewhat prematurely out of the tangle of tragic events, lends a needed touch of brightness to the finale.—Length, 6 reels.—E. F. Supple.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Russell in his American Film production, "The Valley of Tomorrow," released by Pathe, will be shown at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

The story is one in which William Russell in the role of Dabney Morgan, a young mountaineer, sets forth to avenge the betrayal and death of his young sister who has been wronged by a foreign scoundrel, Colonna, who, together with his sister, a girl of remarkable beauty, is convalescing in the mountainous districts near the Morgan home. The culprit flees pursued by the Morgan faction who are resolved to exact full penalty for the wrong done to their kin. Colonna's sister goes to Long John Morgan the patriarchal head of the Morgan clan and begs him to use his influence in calling off the pursuers from the path of their intended victim. He turns a deaf ear to her pleas, answering that it is the law of the faction to neither rest or sleep until a family wrong has been avenged.

Meanwhile Dabney Morgan, who has been pursuing a hunt of his own for his sister's betrayer, a man whom he has never seen, becomes enmeshed in the quicksands of a river-bed and is rescued from certain death by the timely assistance of a stranger, who turns out to be the very man that the Morgan faction have sworn to "get." In gratitude to his rescuer, Dabney holds off the Morgan clan from their prey, much to their disgust and despite their insistence that he has no right to befriend the undoer of his own sister, no matter what the occasion for mercy. He answers that he not they will exact the penalty. Colonna is given a chance for his life by young Morgan. He accepts the opportunity but in the execution of the plan falls, fatally wounded, by a shot from Dabney's rifle.

Colonna's beautiful sister, Eleanore, now arrives on the scene and by a twist of circumstances gets control of the situation, forcing Dabney at the point of a revolver to convey her helpless brother to a lonely mountain cabin and there administer aid in an effort to save the wretch's life. In the ensuing events, Dabney and Eleanore, though set at cross-purposes by the bonds of duty and kin, fall in love with each other. Colonna eventually dies, and Dabney, setting behind him the Valley of Yesterday with its dark tragedy enters with Eleanore into the love and happiness of the Valley of Tomorrow. The role gives William Russell an unusual opportunity to display his talents in expressing dramatic action and tense emotion. He carries off the part with all his accustomed finish of style.

William Russell has a congenial role in Pathe's "The Valley of Tomorrow"

PROGRAM READER

He loved the sister of the very man who had betrayed his own kin. He set forth resolved to "get" the betrayer at all costs. But his errand of vengeance only brought him to the knowledge of a true love, and he found himself torn between the resolve to exact a full revenge from the undoer of his own sister and his new-found love for the sister of his intended victim. Rather a perplexing dilemma for a virile young mountaineer to find himself in, especially when he has behind him all the primitive traditions of a rude mountaineer clan whose supreme law is to never allow a wrong to go unavenged.

This is the role William Russell assumes in "The Valley of Tomorrow," due to appear in this theatre next week. Action and tense emotion permeate this story from start to finish, and Russell's talents are seen at their best in this picture.

"THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY"

(UNIVERSAL)

Sensational Picture of Aeroplane Feats

HERE is a picture which no exhibitor can afford to overlook. In booking "The Great Air Robbery," and exploiting it as an amazing photoplay of death-defying stunts in the air, patrons are sure to make a beaten path to his door. Once inside and they will look upon something new under the sun. It is not the story itself which will concern the majority of them; that is only a different version of the familiar mail coach robbery. What they will see is the transplanting of the old time action to the air. And what action it is.

The plot revolves around a set of aeroplane bandits who plan to rob the transcontinental aerial mail, and the very nature of it sounds the clarion of revolutionary tactics concerning the screen. With the aeroplane here to stay the up-to-date producer will enlist it among his properties and also sign up a courageous air pilot or two. Lieut. O. L. Locklear has gotten a start on his rivals by becoming the star of this Universal thriller. The feats he executes here are plentiful enough for a flying circus. His outstanding stunt is when he leaps from his aeroplane to a rope ladder of a machine flying above him. And thus he saves the heroine from being kidnapped by the bandit. The scenes are authentic and are apparently taken a few thousand feet in the air. The scenic embellishments are worthy of mention since you look upon vistas of the Grand Canyon far below.

Indeed you get all the thrills of flying from this picture without experiencing any of its dangers. You look with amazement upon the nerve of Locklear, and you wonder at the risks that he and his company have taken. A point worth emphasizing is the fact that the camera is literally on top of the actors most of the time. And everyone seems to violate the laws of gravity. Jacques Jaccard is the director.—Length, 5 reels.—Released January 28.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the most remarkable photoplays that has ever been shown will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week under the title of "The Great Air Robbery." This is a Universal feature and presents Lieut. O. L. Locklear as the star, supported by such prominent players as Allan Forrest, Ray Ripley, Francelia Billington and Carmen Phillips.

The story concerns a group of aeroplane bandits who plan to rob the transcontinental aerial mail. It is Lieut. Locklear's duty to frustrate their scheme. And he is completely successful after a series of hazardous feats. He plays the part of Larry Cassidy of the U. S. Mail service. A plot is afoot to steal a shipment of $20,000 in gold which is to be taken to the Washington mint on the midnight plane. The sky-robbers do not know the air route which the machine is to travel. Cassidy and Wallie Mason, another aviator in the Mail service, are intrigued to give up the precious information and the latter is made the victim of a frame-up.

Complications ensue and when they are eventually cleared up, Van Arland, the leader of the robbers, is in the air with the package of gold. The heroine has been taken prisoner by him. So Larry gives chase. The girl drops a rope ladder from Van Arland's plane and flying close beneath, Cassidy catches it and climbs aboard where he makes the sky bandit a prisoner. This is a picture of thrilling action and startling suspense. It is punctuated with remarkable backgrounds, the vistas beneath the flying planes, disclosing the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. The story was written by Jacques Jaccard and George Hively, while Mr. Jacques attended to the direction.

CATCH LINES

See "The Great Air Robbery," the greatest picture of thrills ever shown. Absolutely the greatest sensation of the screen. Don't miss it.

They planned to rob the transcontinental aerial mail. How were they frustrated? See "The Great Air Robbery," a picture of death-defying stunts and thrilling exploits.

Did you ever have the wish to go up in an aeroplane but didn't exactly have the nerve? You can enjoy the sensation without risk to your life when you see "The Great Air Robbery," the film sensation.

See Lieut. O. L. Locklear, the dare-devil of the air, in a series of amazing feats. See him in the stupendously thrilling picture, "The Great Air Robbery." A rare treat.

PROGRAM READER

Do you happen to know that the highway robber is a passing figure—that he is too old-fashioned to practise his profession in this modern way? Do you happen to know that his successor is the sky-highwayman who holds up aeroplanes in the government service? He might be called a product of the war. When you see "The Great Air Robbery" at this theatre next ——— you will see a story of highway robbery in the upper regions. You will see daring aviators risk their lives time and again in amazing feats. You will get all the thrills of riding in an aeroplane without running the danger of losing your life. You will see Lieut. O. L. Locklear, the star of the picture, in death-defying stunts. He is the dare-devil of the air. You will see him jump from one aeroplane to another and perform other miraculous feats. Don't miss this picture; it is the sensation of the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

Advertise this picture as the sensation of the screen. Go the limit and don't be afraid of your adjectives. The picture will back up every thing you say about it. Place emphasis that it is the first feature to exploit the aeroplane as an instrument of robbery. It has taken the place of the old-time stage coach. Bring out that the picture is filled with scene after scene of amazing feats performed by dare-devil aviators. Mention that the star is Lieut. O. L. Locklear, the greatest dare-devil of them all. He performs stunts here that defy description. Mention that he jumps from one plane to another and executes other hazardous feats. Emphasize this picture as the one thriller that will never be forgotten. Play up that the action transpires in the sky far above the yawning chasms of the Grand Canyon. You can't go too strong in advertising this feature.

"BEHIND THE DOOR"

(INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

A Wonderfully Realistic Story of Revenge

THIS is the story of a strong man's revenge, woven with consummate skill and enacted by a cast of great types, headed by Hobart Bosworth, veteran of many a picture of the great outdoors and who fits in the role of Captain Krug, a German American in command of a U. S. merchant marine ship during the war, as perhaps no other actor of the whole profession might. As a foil for his wonderful portrayal Mr. Bosworth has Wallace Beary, who plays the part of the German submarine commander.

The story begins on land, with Captain Krug suspected of being a German sympathizer. It ends on the high seas, with the war of the world, so far as Krug is concerned, narrowed down to a personal conflict with the German who has outraged his wife beyond the power of words to express it, and the inflicting upon him of the most terrible vengeance that the strong mind of a man who hated to the point of insanity could devise.

You do not see what goes on "behind the door" except by shadows, as the two giants of the human race struggle, but there is no mistaking what is occurring. Even if the craftsmanship in film construction and the acting of those whom the film purports are seeing had failed, which it does not, you would still know what had happened.

Dramatically it is a great picture. Rough, even brutal and horribly realistic, is the story which Irvin Willat has evolved from Gouverneur Morris' story as published in Collier's, but it will not soon be forgotten. And it marks Hobart Bosworth's return to the screen. Both this fact and the production are events.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Oscar Krug	Hobart Bosworth
Alice Morse	Jane Novak
Lieut. Brandt	Wallace Beery
Bill Tavish	James Gordon
McQuestion	Dick Wain
Matthew Morse	J. P. Lockney
Gideon Blank	Gibson Goland
Mark Arnold	Otto Hoffman

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Hobart Bosworth veteran screen star, famous for so many wonderful pictures of the great outdoors has come back to the shadow stage in a picture worthy his time and talents. It is "Behind the Door," a Thos. H. Ince production, scheduled for showing at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

The photoplay is an adaptation of Gouverneur Morris's great story which was published in Collier's Weekly some time ago and which created a sensation that will only be outlived by the picture which has been created from its highly original and virile plot.

Mr. Bosworth has the role of Captain Krug, a German-American commander of a U. S. merchantman during the war. It is a role which permits every talent of this genious in portraying characters of the more rugged type full sway. In an equally prominent part that of the commander of a German submarine is Wallace Beary. As Captain Krug's wife, is Jane Novak, a star in her own right. Given such a cast and with direction by Irvin Willat which has never been excelled, a great dramatic picture may be expected. "Behind the Door" is all of that. It is an epoch in the art of picture making. A production which the whole world will not dare to forget. It is too realistic, too great a feature in it's every detail. See it—the story of a terrible revenge by a man who had suffered until merely killing his enemy on sight was not to be considered. He must pay twice over. And he did.

PROGRAM READER

Do you want to see a picture which will make you grip your seat, catch your breath and perhaps close your eyes because of its thrilling action? Do you enjoy a picture that gets out of the beaten path and presents men as they are under certain conditions, with the veneer of civilization stripped from them, shoved back a thousand years to the caveman days when strength ruled and hate and love were the only two passions known? Do you wish to see a fight that passes anything in its intensity that has ever peen staged? Do you want to see a hundred scenes, some of them may not be exactly pleasant that will make you forget that it is all a play and force you to live for the moment with the screen images in a great story of the terrible wrong one man did to humanity and a man and the revenge the wronged man exacted in full payment for himself and the human race? Do you wish to see the most wonderful dramatic picture of the year? Then see "Behind the Door," the latest Thomas H. Ince production. It will begin a ——— days' engagement at this theatre beginning ———.

Hobart Bosworth and Jane Novak in "Behind the Door"

SUGGESTIONS

Since this picture is so unusual, so gruesome and unpleasant, in spite of the fact that it is a great drama you should not allow your audience to come in without acquainting them with the facts. We should not hesitate in telling them what to expect. Tell them it is an unusual story. Bill Bosworth to the limit, with due mention of the fact that this role marks his return to the screen. Give the Thos. H. Ince studios all the credit with mention of the source from which the plot of the feature came. Don't mince matters in advertising this film. You may make some women stay at home but you will get other patrons to take their place if you bill it correctly and emphasize the fact that it is a "he" man story with more punch than find their way into a dozen pictures.

CATCH LINES

"I swore I'd skin him alive but he died on me—damn him," said Captain Krug, the man they had thought pro-German.

"THE PRINCE OF AVENUE A"

(UNIVERSAL)

James J. Corbett Stars in Political Story

A PICTURE of New York's East Side as it concerns politics is presented in "The Prince of Avenue A," a Universal feature starring James J. Corbett. One has only to look at the title appreciate the idea behind it. And you can guess with the former eavyweight champion giving expression to its colorful action that will prove to be an entertaining photoplay, even though certain oints are exaggerated. The plot revolves around the ability of the ish to take care of themselves in politics, and it is concentrated pon the rival leaders in the 'steenth ward.

License is taken with truth on several occasions, an example of hich may be found in the debonair son of Boss O'Connor, finding mance with the daughter of the candidate for mayor, a resident Fifth Avenue. He cannot be elected without the support of the ard and when the Prince is ejected from his house for his boorish nduct, the candidate trembles for his office. To square accounts takes his daughter to the district and offers a public apology. he picture is episodic in treatment, since it presents a series of indents in the hectic lives of the ward heelers and the Prince. Knowg Jim Corbett's athletic prowess you anticipate a rousing climax hich offers a battle royal. And you are not disappointed. He terally mops the floor with his antagonists.

Pathos has its moments and this element is well commingled with e humorous highlights. Director Jack Ford has caught the Irish irit and also the cheap political game and has emphasized them r their full value. "The Prince of Avenue A" is an old-fashioned ory and one that doesn't carry a great deal of thought, but it is acptable for its atmosphere, and how East Side politicians are made. lr. Corbett is an ideal type for the title role. Prominent in his support are Harry Northrup, Richard Cummings and Mary Warren.—ength, 5 reels.—Released February 23.—Laurence Reid.

SUGGESTIONS

A picture of Irish love and politics—at is the way to feature this latest Uniersal release, "The Prince of Avenue A." ring out that it unfolds the way of policians on the lower East Side. Emphasize e value of the title and use it in catch nes. In your musical program have the rchestra feature the old tunes familiar to New York such as "The Bowery," "East Side, West Side, All About the Town," "Annie Rooney," etc. Concentrate upon the value of the star's name and that he is the former heavyweight champion of the ring. Tell that he is the star of the serial, "The Midnight Man." Play up the fact that the picture is rich in atmosphere and local color. And that it unfolds a quota of fast-moving action.

"A DAUGHTER OF TWO WORLDS"

FIRST NATIONAL

Norma Talmadge Has Story of Shadows and Sunshine

NORMA TALMADGE is not afraid of the involved story judging from the enthusiasm of her work in this, her initial First National picture. While not carrying on the burdens of a dual role, still the demands of the story present her as living a dual identity. It is familiar material as far as the screen is concerned. The idea of a girl brought up in the underworld and lifted from her environment to the clear spaces where shadows never penetrate has been done since time immmorial. We cannot remember when it has been incorporated in such a wealth of melodramatic incident as presented here.

One cannot say that the theme is entirely logical, but there is no denying its interesting moments, particularly when Miss Talmadge and Frank Sheridan are before the camera. Whenever the star lifts the suspense with her interludes of romance, the latter keeps it going because he is the only conspicuous player who is consistent to the end. Thoroughly grounded in his art, he gives just the right amount of dramatic substance that the story needed for interpretation. A product of the underworld, he is resolved that his daughter will not grow up in his environment. She is victimized by a forger and with the prospect of a prison term before her she jumps her bail and is hustled off to a fashionable boarding school. And the past is left behind her. Until the concluding reels, when it haunts her again on the old forgery charge.

This melodramatic flourish is reasonable, since one cannot escape a crime. Yet to summarize it we cannot but express that it carries a story book quality in its differentiation of the two worlds. The conflict is fairly well emphasized throughout, though the action is not always spontaneous. Mr. Young, the director, has been more successful with his underworld life than out of it. Here he has caught the right atmosphere and the proper perspective.—Length, 6 reels.—Released January 5.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Norma Talmadge will appear at the —— theatre beginning —— in her initial First National picture entitled "A Daughter of Two Worlds." This is an adaptation of Le Roy Scott's story of the same name and unfolds a story of shadows and sunshine, or in other words presents the life of the underworld, and the world where the law is respected and society is dominant. Miss Talmadge has in Jennie Malone, a product of the underworld, a role that permits her to reach the emotional heights.

The plot is concerned with the transformation of the girl into a respected member of society. Her father's ambition is to give her an opportunity to find expression in a world that is foreign to him.

She becomes victimized in a forgery case and jumping her bail, she is hidden away in a boarding school where, after four years, she emerges with her father's ambition gratified. But the menace of the past stalks in her path and one day she is arrested on the old forgery charge. Events loom up very black indeed and she stands to lose all that she has gained. The crisis is reached when Jennie is confronted with the alternative of giving away her true identity at the risk of losing her fiance and her place in society, or remaining silent at the cost of the life of a friend of the underworld who has been wrongly accused of murder. Jennie takes the latter course and her fiance is manly enough to keep faith in her. A picture of rich melodramatic action, sprinkled with scenes of effective sentiment and romance. A picture of strong conflict and sharp contrasts. Miss Talmadge is supported by a capable cast that includes Frank Sheridan.

CATCH LINES

She came from the underworld and society never knew her lowly origin until—What happened? Did she go back to the life of shadows or remain in the sunshine? See "A Daughter of Two Worlds."

See Norma Talmadge in her latest triumph "A Daughter of Two Worlds." A picture of strong conflict and sharp contrasts. It will interest you. See this beautiful star in a powerful picture.

She had reached the top of the new world. The old world was left far behind. Then something happened which formed a crisis in her career. She had to make a great decision. What was it?

She belonged to two worlds—her father's underworld and the world of her fiance, a respected member of society. There came a time when she had to decide which one to accept. See how she solves her problem.

PROGRAM READER

Manager —— begs to announce that Talmadge will appear at the —— theatre beginning —— in her latest photodrama entitled, "A Daughter of Two Worlds." This is an adaptation of Le Roy Scott's story of the same name and presents the star in a role which demands a great deal in the way of emotional expression. She plays a girl from the underworld who rises above her environment and then when she finds a place in society the old shadows of the past appear before her. How she settles her problem and still maintains her good position is told in a series of exciting chapters—chapters which are rich in dramatic action and suspense. The picture is softened occasionally with moments of heart interest and pathos. The star is supported by a cast of well known players. James Young is the director.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit this picture as the initial appearance of Norma Talmadge as a First National star. Bring out that the public is always interested in following the career of this topnotcher. Play up the fact that the picture is an adaptation of Le Roy Scott's story of the same name. It would be a good point to emphasize the author's position in American fiction. Doubtless there are many who have read the original story. Play up the theme and that it offers the star a splendid chance to display her histrionic ability. Feature the picture as a study in the underworld and the world of society where the law is respected. Bring out its salient points—particularly the great decision in the heroine's life. Mention the other members of the cast. Bring out the name of the director.

"SHE LOVES AND LIES"

SELECT)

Enjoyable Comedy Drama with Norma Talmadge

A CLEVER exposition of the way to catch a husband is offered in Select's adaptation of Wilkie Collins' story, with Norma Talmadge giving emphasis to the verbs in the title. The plot this subject is as light as moondust and it won't stand analysis om the premise of truth. Chet Withey, who directed the feature. as realized upon its humorous values by keeping it strictly in its ement. Therefore there is no reason to dwell upon its weakness drama. The idea may be far-fetched, but still it doesn't pretend sound any truths. It merely capitalizes, with a quota of subtles and shadings, how a resourceful girl can win and hold a usband.

The role offers Miss Talmadge rich opportunity to express her ersatility. And it may be said for her that she makes the character ctually lifelike, so natural is her conduct. She plays a sort of dual ole in that she assumes the identity of an elderly lady in order to ave a worthy young man from bankruptcy. He must marry her to eestablish himself. Another stipulation is that he has a right to ek a divorce whenever he falls in love. So this permits her to ppear disguised as a young girl and play the gay deceiver. Natrally, he falls deeply in love.

You may wonder why she went to such trouble to appear in the wo disguises. The reason is she had to marry the man of her choice. lad she selected him as a young girl, then you would have seen a lay of serious moments, with triangle plottings and what not. As t is you have an enjoyable comedy drama which becomes quite arcical at times. Mr. Withey, who with Grant Carpenter wrote the ontinuity, has kept the action spontaneous throughout. There are o draggy moments and the headlights are well emphasized by ppropriate captions. Eliminate a couple of nondescript characters nd the picture hasn't a flaw. It offers no pretentions, but scores or its humor, charm and the acting of the star and Conway Tearle. —Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture of the way to win and hold a usband is presented in "She Loves and ies," a Select picture starring Norma Talnadge. The star will appear at the ——— heatre beginning ———. The role which Miss Talmadge assumes offers her an opportunity to masquerade under several identities. As Marie Callender, she is made the eiress of an elderly gentlemen's estate provided she chooses her own husband. She nds the right man in the person of Ernest ismore, but being somewhat modest she is nable to be frank in asking him to marry er. Consequently Marie disguises herself s an elderly lady of considerable fortune. nasmuch as Ernest is in a state of bankuptcy she offers him a chance to marry her nd recoup his wealth, but with the condiion that any time he falls in love she will gladly give him a divorce.

Then the inevitable happens. Marie assumes the disguise of a young woman for he purpose of making her husband fall in ove with her. But he is too honorable to peak of divorce. In the end Marie loses er wig and her semblance of age and stands efore Ernest in all her young womanhood. It is a play of ludicrous situations which are developed to their full humorous value by Director Chet Withey. There are also moments of dramatic suspense and back of it all is a charming romance. Miss Talmadge andles a difficult role with customary ease. She is assisted by Conway Tearle, Ida Darling and others. The picture is an adaptation of Wilkie Collin's story of the same name, the scenario having been done by Grant Carpenter and Mr. Withey.

CATCH LINES

There are more ways than one to catch a man. Did you ever think girls, of assuming the identity of an old woman to catch a husband? Come and see "She Loves and Lies" and learn a few pointers from Norma Talmadge.

She was too modest to ask a man to be er husband so she practised the gay art of deceit. She would become an elderly woman and win him because of her fortune. Love might come afterward.

See "She Loves and Lies," the brightest comedy-drama of the year. A picture of a charming romance. See how a girl wins a husband by masquerading as an old lady.

How would you like to ask a man to be your husband and then deceive him into making him love you. Come and see Norma Talmadge in the sparkling romantic comedy-drama, "She Loves and Lies."

PROGRAM READER

If she chose her own husband she would come into a tidy fortune. But how to do it? That was the perplexing question that puzzled Marie Callender. She was too modest to confront him as a young girl. So she adopted the disguise of an old woman—an aristocratic old woman. She would appear before this bankrupt young man with an offer that he might marry her and thus "get back on his feet." Of course he could get a divorce any time he fell in love. But when she put on her gray wig and found herself married, the question arose—"How will I make him love me?" So she took off her wig and made him fall in love with her. Think of it! He fell in love with his own wife and didn't know her. The climax of this charming story is a rich solution of one way to win a husband. Girls you can take a lesson from this resourceful young woman. Come and see Norma Talmadge in "She Loves and Lies." It is a bright little play that scintillates with sparkling situations. Conway Tearle is the leading man.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which unfolds a novel theme which it would do well to exploit. You can play upon the curiosity of the feminine sex by advising them of one way to win a husband. Make emphatic that they will see something new in the business of courtship. Take advantage of the title by bringing out its value in catch lines. Use the theme in your arguments and tell that a girl can masquerade and catch a husband. The masculine sex is composed of gullible, stupid fellows who take everything for granted. Tell that a woman cannot be excelled in the art of practising deceit. Emphasize the picture as a sparkling comedy-drama—one that unfolds a scintillating series of interesting situations. Feature the romance. Bring out that an opportunity is here to see Norma Talmadge as a comedienne. And dwell upon her versatility. Mention that Conway Tearle is the leading man and that Chester Withey is the director.

"THE BLINDNESS OF YOUTH"

(FOUNDATION)

This Love Story Has Pictorial Appeal

LIKE a visualization of some poem by Keats or Tennyson is "The Blindness of Youth," a state rights picture sponsored by Murray W. Garsson. The name of M. L. Herbier is put down as the scenarioist and that of M. Mercanton as the director. We rather suspect that the feature was made under the auspices of Europeans. Whatever its source, it can be accepted by exhibitors as an interesting photoplay—one that expresses a love story as old as the ages—one that builds easily and surely to its climax and sending out on its journey a goodly portion of sentiment and heart appeal and particularly rich photography.

It is a tale of unrequited love and presents a youth who seeks solace in death because of the poetry taken out of his life. The suicide has a poet's soul and he worships at the shrine of a girl who is only faintly aware of his existence. It is impossible for her to accept him or encourage him, since their temperaments are wholly unlike, and so he goes his lonely way to oblivion. With his death the picture takes on a dramatic value. His father, a hermit, is so heartbroken over the event that it drives him insane. Upon his release from the asylum he seeks out the girl to punish her. He uses hypnotic suggestion and leads the girl to the very waters where the boy took his life. But a vision of the youth comes to him, advising him that the girl is in no way responsible. And so he sacrifices his life instead. The heroine is left to find expression in a romance of her own.

A fantastic story if you will, but one that is charming because of its pathos and simplicity. Most of the action transpires about a picturesque waterfall, which is as enchanting as it is colorful. While the personnel of the cast is somewhat unknown, the players give a good account of themselves. The title has exploitation possibilities which an exhibitor should not overlook.—Released February 1.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Blindness of Youth" is the name of the picture which will come to the——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Sponsored by the Foundation Film Corporation it presents a story which is easily the oldest in the gamut of human emotions.

A youth with the soul of a poet, Lawrence Arden by name, practices his profession of wood carving in a little village in Switzerland. Into his life or rather into his vision there comes Vera Dawson, a beautiful American girl. He is deeply moved by her loveliness and the starved soul—the love hunger of the boy is not given any response. The succeeding summer follows and as Vera returns to the little hamlet, the young woodcarver attempts to express his ardor. But Vera has a different kind of temperament. Try as she might her efforts are fruitless toward disillusioning him. She simply is unaware of the all consuming passion he has for her.

Neglected and despondent, Lawrence commits suicide, and his fond parent, a hermit, loses his mind over the tragedy. After his release from the asylum, the old man attempts to lure Vera to death through hypnotic suggestion, but the spirit of the dead youth arises from the waters and beckoning the father to join him in death, tells him that the girl is in no way to blame. She never knew and could not understand. Thus Vera is rescued by her husband whom she married the second summer. A picture of unrequited love and blind passion. A picture of vital heart interest and sentiment. That is "The Blindness of Youth." The action is set off in scenes of great natural beauty, and the interpretation is taken care of by a competent cast headed by Gertrude Shelbourne.

CATCH LINES

He was blind with passion. She was blind to his all-consuming love. A tragedy came to one. The waters called and he obeyed. Did her eyes open? See "The Blindness of Youth."

See "The Blindness of Youth," a story of unrequited love. "None are so blind as who will not see!" She couldn't see the love the youth felt for her. She was blind to his anguish.

He couldn't live without her but in his death his spirit protected her. To eternity he would love her. And she never knew, and could not understand. See "The Blindness of Youth."

Love tugged at his heart strings and they snapped when he felt no vibration from the woman of his life. She was the one woman. He couldn't live without her. What happened? See "The Blindness of Youth."

PROGRAM READER

He was a shy, modest youth with the soul of a poet. He idealized women. Then one day his ideal came and he worshipped at her shrine. He was contented to love her from a distance. Sometimes he would steal upon her when she was asleep and place flowers near by. Then as the floodtides of his passion burst he wanted her—wanted her to appease the hunger gnawing at his heart. But she did not respond. She was of a different mould. She didn't love him and yet she was too kind to send him away. Then one day something happened. The blindness of youth led him away from all that was sunshine. His was a love not to be violated. To him she was the one woman. How he found a solution to his trouble is told in scenes of dramatic action—action which is the utmost in heart interest and sentiment. Is youth blind to the ways of the heart? See "The Blindness of Youth" at this theatre next ———.

CATCH LINES

The title is the biggest selling angle about this feature so concentrate upon it in all your copy. Don't neglect to bring out its value. Exploit it in a series of questions such as: "Is Youth Blind?" "Does Business Go With Wisdom?" Don't exploit the story too much. It has a tragic note to it that might keep sensitive patrons away. Bring out, however, that the picture unfolds a beautiful love story—a story of youthful love—of all-consuming love. Play up the beautiful scenery. It is really exquisite. Conduct your exploitation along the catch line angle also. You can send out teasers asking questions anent the title. Dwell upon the blindness of youth in love. Use stills of the feminine lead, Gertrude Shelbourne. And use all you can get of the backgrounds. Bring out its charm and pathos and sentiment.

"SKY EYE"

(STATE RIGHTS—SOL LESSER)

Thrilling Melodrama in Mid-Air

THIS could be correctly described as a thrilling melodrama in mid-air. Although there are two romances unfolded, and a villain persistently plots to undermine the hero in love, and ruin his fiancee's father in business, the air thrills dominate throughout.

All of the action takes place on a United States training field for aviators, and the adjoining rich oil fields of Texas. The riot at the oil wells furnishes some of the excitement, and one particularly thrilling scene is the chase of the airman after the troop train which finally shows him leaping from his airplane to the top of the fast moving train.

Your audience will know that these heroic stunts are not faked, and there are no slow moments in the picture. It presents great exploitation possibilities and your patrons will not be disappointed after you get them in. A mighty good topical and advanced photodrama that will satisfy most anywhere. There are no well known film artists in the cast and the story will not stand keen analysis. But regardless of direction, continuity or the quality of the story, the stunts outshines all these.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, good puller and entirely pleasing; Workers, big puller and very pleasing.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Sky-Eye" is the film attraction scheduled to be shown at the ——— theatre for——— days beginning ———.

"A thrilling melodrama of the air and a romance of the Texas oil fields," is the way this production is described. Daring stunts with airplanes are said to be portrayed.

United States aviators on Ellington Aviation Field afford many of the thrills injected, and are the heroes of the story. This is, however, not a war picture.

One oil operator is in love with the beautiful daughter of another oil operator. He is continually plotting to ruin the father so that the girl will be forced to accept his attentions. But the girl loves "Sky-Eye" Blake, an aviator at the adjoining U. S. Aviation field.

The plotter finally determines to muster his private group of airplanes manned by his own unscrupulous men and blow up his rival's oil plants. It is then that some fast action develops and a riot occurs at the plant. The riot gave the plot away for it prompted "Sky-Eye" Blake to take to the skies after a troop train in order to quell the riot.

While above the clouds he spies the machines of the plotter hovering about waiting for darkness. He overtakes the fast-moving troop train and makes a daring leap from his airplane to the top of the train and succeeds in persuading the soldiers to return and stop the rioting at the oil plants.

All sorts of "circus" stunts are witnessed afterwards when the battle in mid-air takes place. There are many battles on the ground also in bucking the rioters and in the excitement the girl and her father are captured by aides of the arch plotter and taken away in a fast power boat. After a battle she is left alone in the fast speeding boat and her sweetheart overtakes her in his airplane and fairly scoops her up with him in the airplane to safety. Then the marriage is performed in the clouds.

PROGRAM READER

Courted in the clouds and married above the clouds is the experience of one pretty girl.

What could be more romantic?

Before this happy culmination her hero has performed some wonderful deeds of heroism. In order to save her father's oil plant in Texas the daring U. S. Airman quelled a riot.

To do this he flew away and overtook a troop train. When he caught up with the fast moving train he leaps from his airplane to the roof of the rocking train and this is but one of the many deeds of daring "Sky-Eye" accomplished.

"A thrilling melodrama of mid-air" is the manner of describing this charming romance of the Texas oil fields.

The title of the picture is "Sky-Eye," and it will be shown at this theatre next week.

One of the most novel and unique photoplays ever produced.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture you should concentrate all your energies in describing it as a photoplay of daredevil stunts, a thrill melodrama of midair, a charming romance of the Texas oil fields. This will get them away from the impression that this may be a war feature. Then your cuts and stills will do the rest. You can enumerate many of the thrills, including the final marriage in the clouds. Use the catch lines also and available material contained in the Press Notice-Story or the Program Reader on this page. There are no stars to draw them in so you must concentrate on the daring stunts.

CATCH LINES

He was up in the air when he asked her to wed and she was up in the air also when she accepted.

One couple courted in the heights and were married before they got down to earth.

A battle is always thrilling but a battle in the clouds is a sight that will remain with you forever.

Daredevil heroes in daring stunts, changing airplane in mid-air and dropping off airplanes on to the top of fast moving trains.

"HEART STRINGS"

(FOX)

Hodge Podge of Sentiment and Melodrama Here

IT is a strange picture one has of William Farnum in his latest offering, "Heart Strings." The familiar exponent of the spirit of the West—the ever ready sponsor of virile strength has gotten out of character and his new role—that of a dispensor of sentiment and sticky pathos—does not fit him. Mr. Farnum is supposed to play upon the heart strings of the spectator here with a sample of emotional acting, but his efforts are fruitless owing to the hackneyed theme and the inconsistencies that its development creates.

But the sentiment is piled on so thickly and the melodramatic incidents are so false that the subject falters and resembles nothing else than a "sob sister" story. Mr. Farnum plays a violin through five reels, and moments when it is tucked away in its case, he is looking out for little sister who has dishonored the family name. The action transpires in Quebec and New York and before it is concluded an elaborate anti-climax is introduced which involves the situations instead of clarifying them. The hero compels the villain to marry sister, though it looks like an act of brutality when she has already been crippled by the wretch.

These incidents are incorporated in the finale and are like adding fuel to a fire that has spent itself. Mr. Farnum struggles bravely with the material and that he is able to hold the suspense is due to his sheer strength of personality. But he belongs in virile subjects of the Zane Grey pattern. He is out of his element here. The other members of the cast are adequate.—Length, 7 reels.—Released January 18.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Farnum, the virile Fox star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— in his latest feature production entitled "Heart Strings." The story affords the star a different role than he is usually identified with—a role of considerable heart interest as the title suggests. Mr. Farnum appears as Pierre Fournel, who resides with his sister, Gabrielle, in a village in Quebec. His reputation as a violinist and composer extends throughout the province, and his great love for his sister also is a matter of common knowledge. Kathleen Noyes, a wealthy New Yorker, is attracted to him through his playing, which naturally arouses the jealousy of her fiance, Rupert Blake. An opportunity comes to go to New York but on the eve of his departure, Pierre learns that his sister has had a love affair with one Rouget, a ne'er-do-well.

A series of dramatic situations develop from the romances of the French-Canadians. The violinist overcomes the obstacles in his path eventually. He is accused of theft; his sister has loved unwisely and too well, but sunshine breaks through the clouds and spreads happiness everywhere. Gabrielle's honor is vindicated and Pierre himself clears his name of suspicion, and the story closes on him in his new-found romance. A vital tale of simple love and devotion—a tale which generates a generous portion of heart interest and sentiment. It affords the star opportunities to run the gamut of emotions and he accepts them with rare discrimination. Mr. Farnum has in his supporting cast Gladys Coburn, Betty Milburn, Robert Cain and others.

SUGGESTIONS

Varied though the stories are in which William Farnum appears, there is a certain similarity about them when it comes to the character of the roles he enacts. Each one of them contains the elements of virility, punch, fight—in fact all sorts of strength. Are you making this sort of role synonymous with the name of William Farnum? The star goes a long way in establishing this on his own account, but he can't do it all. Advertise him as being synonymous with such character elements. You might emphasize here that the star has a role not quite as "western" as some of his previous releases. Be sure to bring out that the part is rich in sentiment and heart interest. Emphasize that a different William Farnum is presented here—a William Farnum who is permitted the opportunity to exploit every dramatic emotion. You have an attractive title to advertise, so play up its value. Tell that the star conquers again but in a different way.

CATCH LINES

He played the violin with beautiful expression. When he touched his bow to the strings, the music brought a response from the heart. See "Heart Strings." See William Farnum in his latest triumph, "Heart Strings." A beautiful story of simple love and devotion—a story of heart throbs.

He came from a tiny village in Quebec and found New York ready to listen to his wonderful violin playing.

PROGRAM READER

Pierre Fournel loved his violin. He also loved his sister. And because of his undying affection for the latter he was able to express wonderful harmonies on his beloved instrument. He played with so much feeling that it attracted a beautiful woman to him—the first woman to enter his life. And she inspired him so greatly that he became a celebrity. But with his happiness came sorrow. As rain follows the sunshine Pierre found that his life was filled with strange conflicts. Disillusionment came to him when he found his little sister had loved unwisely and too well. But he had a practise of seeing things through to a finish. He loved and fought as he played on his violin—earnestly and with forceful determination. How he found a solution to his problems is told in a series of dramatic events which are calculated to hold you in a tight embrace so rich are they in action and heart interest and romance. "AN ADVENTURE IN HEARTS"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Great Production of Popular Play and Novel

THOSE who have forgotten their own love making days or are ashamed of them may say "slush" at this romantic, melodramatic offering which James Cruze and Robert Warwick ive constructed from Anthony Hope's great old play and novel, Captain Dieppe," but if we are not mistaken the majority of any idience will call it first class entertainment and go home perfectly tisfied, perhaps to dream that they are the principals of the story, ale or female, according to the sex of the dreamer.

Without a question this is the best picture in which Robert War-ick has appeared since his return to civil life and as "Captain ieppe" he has a role which fits him like a glove. One may well elieve him to be the American soldier of fortune who has mixed imself up in the intrigues of a mythical little principality of urope, as it was before the war and be delighted with viewing at ose range his foiling of his enemies' plans and his successful court-ip of the "lady fair."

As for production nothing better can be desired. Sets, exteriors nd properties are correct in every detail. The players are good pes and capable down to the very minor roles. The lightings and ffects are excellent. Especially good are some storm scenes.

The story is—well, familiar so far as plot is concerned even to the papers," but no one is going to complain.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Robert Warwick, the popular Paramount-Artcraft star, will come to the ——— theatre for ——— days, beginning ——— in his latest photoplay entitled "An Adventure in Hearts." The picture is an adaptation of Anthony Hope's celebrated novel, "Captain Dieppe," which also was dramatized for the stage. The story is a worthy companion to the author's earlier book, "The Prisoner of Zenda." The picture tells an entertaining story of adventure, love and excitement in a nobleman's castle in northern Italy.

Mr. Warwick has the role of an American of French decent, who, having just completed a delicate mission for a foreign government, is being hounded by secret agents lest he betray the details of the affair. He seeks shelter in the castle of an Italian count, whose wife and he, newly estranged, are living in opposite wings of the castle. The Countess is being threatened by a gentleman blackmailer to whom she owes gambling debts and has secretly installed her pretty girl cousin in her place while she goes to Rome to raise the money.

A romantic love affair, a thrilling rescue at a swollen ford, and a gun fight in a blazing hut feature the development of the plot from this point. Mr. Warwick is said to be admirably cast. He is supported by Juan de la Cruz, Winifred Greenwood, Helene Chadwick, Walter Long and Howard Gaye. The picture was scenarioized by Elmer Harris and directed by James Cruze. The latter has succeeded in catching the spirit of the original in every respect.

CATCH LINES

See the most romantic actor on the screen, Robert Warwick, in one of the most romantic stories ever written. See "An Adventure in Hearts," an adaptation of Anthony Hope's story, "Captain Dieppe."

Ever read "Captain Dieppe," by Anthony Hope? If you did, you'll be glad to know that it will reach the ——— screen as "An Adventure in Hearts," with Robert Warwick as the star.

See "An Adventure in Hearts," a picture of genuine adventure. Plenty of action and a beautiful romance. Robert Warwick is the star.

A story of love and the secret service, with a soldier of fortune playing a winning game. That is "An Adventure in Hearts," which comes here ——— with Robert Warwick.

PROGRAM READER

Anthony Hope's exciting romantic story, "Captain Dieppe," has reached the screen. First published as a novel, the adventures of the dashing young secret service agent proved a worthy companion of the author's earlier book, "The Prisoner of Zenda." The popularity of "Captain Dieppe" led Mr. Hope to dramatize it and the stage play was produced both here and abroad. Recently the story was made into a scenario and under the title of "An Adventure in Hearts" it will be shown at this theatre very shortly with Robert Warwick as the star. It is a fast moving picture, telling a delightful love story through a series of exciting episodes. And the part that the star assumes is an ideal one for his personality. A splendid cast of players support him, among whom may be found Helene Chadwick, Juan de la Cruz, Winifred Greenwood, Walter Long and Howard Gaye. James Cruze directed the feature.

SUGGESTIONS

First of all in the exploitation of this feature make emphatic that it is a picturization of Anthony Hope's celebrated novel, "Captain Dieppe," which was subsequently dramatized and met with great success upon the stage. Bring out the author's name and mention that he wrote "The Prisoner of Zenda." Then state that Robert Warwick is the star. Lay stress upon the fact that he is the leading romantic actor on the screen and that he has here a romantic story which is ideal for his personality. Mention that it is an adventure story and that the star fulfils every demand of his part. Feature his past successes. Use catch lines around the authorship of the picture. Bring out the director's name. Mention the other players. Feature the picture as a highly colored romance with the romantic soldier-actor as the star.

"The Prince of Avenue A"

PROGRAM READER

Barry O'Connor was the Prince of Avenue A. Although he lived on the lower East Side, he bought his clothes on Fifth Avenue. He didn't mix much in politics, preferring to let his father, the boss of the ward, take care of the voters. But the old man had a rival who feared Barry and wanted him out of the way. His opportunity to disgrace the Prince came when the latter was ejected from the house of the candidate for mayor. And this man could not be elected without the support of the O'Connor voters. So when he hastened down to offer an apology, the rival leader chose to insult the daughter, his motive being to discredit Barry. How this young Irishman took care of himself and the girl is told in an exciting climax—a climax which brings an effective conclusion to a story that holds the interest throughout. See "The Prince of Avenue A." It comes to this theatre very soon with James J. Corbett as the star.

"THE TRIFLERS"

(UNIVERSAL)

Will Afford Very Pleasing Entertainment

ENTIRELY pleasing as a story, direction and cast and affording very satisfactory entertainment. This is not one of those melodramas with the so-called punch in every reel. But it is a picture that will hold your patrons and the majority will undoubtedly register keen enjoyment.

The cast is large and composed of all well-known and capable artists. It is well mounted and has a sweet romantic element. And a good moral as well. The shop girl aspired to a higher plane in society and is disillusioned. And she finally refuses to marry the high brow and accepts her former sweetheart, sergeant of the motor cycle squad.

There is plenty of comedy and many amusing situations in the photoplay. There are no heavy dramatic or sensational scenes. It is just one of those quite true to life pictures that leave a good taste.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, good puller and entirely pleasing; Workers, good puller and very pleasing.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Triflers" in screen form will appear as a Universal feature at the ——— theatre for a ——— days' run beginning ———.

This tells the story of a girl who tries to lift herself out of her station in life and then finds that the place which she presently occupies is really lower than her former plane.

Edith Roberts is the star and she is supported by such well known screen artists as David Butler, Forest Stanley, Benny Alexander, Katherine Kirkman, Arthur Shirley, Arthur Hoyt, Lillian Langdon, Frederick Vroom, Nell Craig, Colin Kenny, Magda Lane, Charles Arling and Olita Otis.

Christy Cabanne directed it for Universal from the story by Joseph Franklin Poland. The shop girl has a sweetheart, Dan Cassidy of the motorcycle squad. But she feels that Dan does not measure up to the fastidious Monte, leader of the younger fashionable set.

So she decides to get a first hand society experience and finally appears in Monte's home for a week-end party. The behavior of the so-called society set was an eye-opener for the girl and she then began to appreciate the good folks of her former environment.

A photoplay of dramatic power is said to be unfolded and the girl, disillusioned, flew to the arms of her former sweetheart when a speeding automobile brings him to Monte's estate.

Romance and thrills are said to abound in this photodrama of today. Her society young man became embroiled in an affair with a chorus girl and this was the first inkling that the heroine had that all was not exactly right with the group. Circumstances combined to give the young ambitious girl a complete insight into the lives of the butterfly set.

And then her former set in all its honesty appealed so strongly to her that Dan Cassidy of the motor-cycle squad was richly rewarded by a happy and contented wife.

PROGRAM READER

She was dissatisfied with her present station in life. A shop girl with ambitions towards a higher plane.

The young man that attracted her was a regular leader of the younger fashionable set. And the shop-girl began to treat her own sweetheart very coldly. She felt that Dan Cassidy of the motor cycle squad did not quite measure up.

Edith Roberts and David Butler in the new Universal picture, "The Triflers"

Her entire view changed and she began to appreciate the wholesome life that she was just on the verge of abandoning. And Dan Cassidy arrived in time to take his sweetheart in his loving arms.

"The Triflers" is the Universal picture starring Edith Roberts, which comes to this theatre next week and charmingly portrays the above incidents.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture it would be well to add the cast of characters to your star propaganda as many of the cast are well known and it is a long list which will appear very comprehensive. Tell them it is from a story by Joseph Franklin Poland. Use catch lines freely. We are appending an extra amount of catch lines to enable you to do this.

CATCH LINES

For goodness sake, stop trifling. Learn a lesson from Edith.

One girl who was ambitious for the high places finds that there "ain't no such places."

It was just as easy for the leopard to change his spots as for this shop-girl to mingle freely with wealth weighted down by bad morals.

Behave, girlies. Remember the fate of the triflers, and profit by it. The demonstration is conducted at the ——— theatre.

A girl steps on high but was glad to fall back again in the arms of the law impersonated by her former sweetheart, of the motor cycle squad.

Boltwood of Yale

By Gilbert Patten

Character of Story: College story.

Theme: Independence.

Characters: Henry Boltwood; Roger Boltwood, his son; Old Cy Keating; Tom Keating, his son; Doris Keating, his daughter.

The Plot: Henry Boltwood and Cy Keating are the rival manufacturers of the Comet car and the Keating car respectively. Their sons are rivals in college affairs. Henry Boltwood, disgusted with an exploit of his son in which an automobile is wrecked, disinherits him. He offers Roger six dollars a week in the factory and $25 a day for four days until he is twenty-one. Roger refuses and declares that he will win his way back to college. He leaves home and looks for work but without result. Going to Long Island to see a friend whom he thinks may help him, he falls in with old Cy Keating stalled on the road. He fixes the car, discovering that the chauffer has tinkered with it. Keating, not knowing him, offers him a job as chauffer. Roger accepts. On the road he beats another racing car and handles the car so well that old Keating exclaims that with such a driver he could win the race with the Comet for the Traymore cup without difficulty. Roger volunteers to drive. Henry Boltwood's assistant has been tampering with Keating's garage men and Keating arriving at his garage fires three men. These three attack Roger but are thrown out of the place. Roger meets Tom's sister and they develop a mutual interest in one another. Roger is to receive $300 for driving the race and $600 if he wins. The day of the race Henry Boltwood tries to have his son disqualified but without success. He then pleads with him not to take the risk but Roger is firm and drives. He wins the race and thus gets enough money to go back to college. Back in Yale Boltwood goes in for the football team—something he has never done before—and buckles down to study in a way that he had never done. His roommate, Martin Philbin, is an admirer of Roger's but falls into easy company, gambling and drinking. He finally forges Roger's name to checks and cleans out four hundred dollars from Roger's account. At the same time stolen articles are discovered in their room and one of Roger's handkerchiefs picked up in a room which has been robbed. Roger is summoned to appear before the faculty on the day of the game, charged with theft and things look black for him when he receives from Martin a letter confessing his misdeeds and stating that he did not mean to throw suspicion upon him. Boltwood goes into the game and saves it for Yale. His reward is the favor of Doris Keating and the apologies of his father who admits that there is something worth while even about the second generation of Boltwoods.

Locale: New York and New Haven.

Picture High Lights: The race; the football game; the fight; the false accusation; the reconciliation.

The Owner of the Lazy D

By Wm. Patterson White

Character of Story. Western.

Theme: Love and war on the range.

Characters: Dal Gilmore, otherwise John Dalling Drummond; Tom Stuart; Alec Stuart, his father; Louise Stuart, Alec's daughter; Tim Simms, Marshall; Tom Johnson, foreman; Sam Kyle, saloon keeper; Maryjane, his wife; Slim Dennison; cattlemen, vigilantes, rustlers, etc.

The Plot: John Dalling Drummond, owner of the Lazy D and Triangle O ranches, who has spent his life in Texas, visits Glenn County where his properties are for the first time, as a deputy sheriff, to investigate a cattle war raging between his ranches and those of the Hash Knife and V Up-and-Down outfit. He stumbles onto a fight between the adherents of these two factions and rescues a beautiful girl who turns out to be Louise Stuart, who takes him to her father's ranch. Learning that he is a deputy she attempts to hold him prisoner, but he fools her by a trick, ties her until she promises not to follow him for half an hour and escapes. Gilmore then begins systematically to clean up the cattle rustlers. He finds that each ranch has been stealing from the other and that the whole country is given over to the practice of "rustling"; that the law is nothing but a name and the officials are corrupt and taking money from both factions. Gilmore's energy in attacking cattle thieves impartially alarms the rustlers and the officials and they employ a gunman to do away with him. This man is killed in a duel over a card table. Gilmore, after a valiant effort to stop cattle stealing by enforcing the law, finally determines that it cannot be done in that way, resigns from his office and sends to his ranch in Texas for recruits. He brings up his cowboys from the South, forms a Vigilance Committee with the co-operation of the somewhat limited decent element in the community and proceeds to hand out elementary justice all around. Louise Stuart who has not really been cognizant of the practices of her own father and his friends, at first resents Gilmore's presence but soon begins to be interested in him and is entirely won over when he rescues her from the hands of Jack Shaw, Tim Simms and Slim Dennison who capture Maryjane Kyle and Louise in the absence of old Alec Stuart and his boys, killing the Chinese servant who tries to defend them. The plot is worked out with an immense amount of detail and a great number of individual encounters, relating the experiences of Gilmore of Drummond in his efforts to clean up the county. Many exciting situations and much gun-play mark the story throughout. As the story stands in its original form there is more action than could be crowded into an ordinary feature picture and it would be less confusing if it were pruned down to some of the more important encounters. The constant clashes between the forces of law and order and those of the cattle rustlers produce an effect which is almost that of repetition although the circumstances of each fight are a little different from those going before.

Locale: Any place in the cattle country.

Beau Rand

By Charles Alden Seltzer

Character of Story: Western.

Theme: Love and jealousy.

Characters: Beaudry Rand, ranchman; Amos Seddon, another ranchman; Eleanor, his daughter; Bud, his illegitimate son, adopted by Rand; Link Compton, cattle thief; Kinney, a gunman; Webster, sheriff; cowboys, etc.; Larry Redfern, a friend of Rand's.

The Plot: Beaudry Rand is feared and hated for his prowess with a six-gun. His particular enemies are Amos Seddon of the Bar S, who fears that Rand will disclose the fact that Rand's adopted boy is really Seddon's own son, and Link Compton, who regards Rand as a rival for the hand of Seddon's daughter, Eleanor. Lucia Morrell, a dance-hall girl warns Rand of a plot upon the part of Compton, Webster and Kinney to kill him and frustrates this plot, disarming his enemies with marvelous gunplay but refraining from killing them. Eleanor begins to undertake the education of Bud, Rand's adopted son. Compton forces Lucia to tell Eleanor that the boy is hers and Rand's and to say that she wants to take the boy away from Rand. Compton also plots to spread the story that Rand is a cattle thief and lays upon his shoulders the claim for the theft of cattle stolen by Compton's own band of cattle rustlers. Compton and his crowd rob the stage, Compton riding on a horse which has been painted black to resemble Rand's, and after the robbery ride in the direction of Rand's ranch. Eleanor has seen this and knows that Compton is guilty. She also overhears Compton planning to have Rand arrested for the robbery, although Rand is the head of the Vigilante committee. Lucia, learning that Eleanor is going to Rand's ranch, tells a half breed that Eleanor is in love with him and sends him there to meet her. Rand by this time has left the ranch, evidence against him in the shape of a bag of gold, having been planted in his desk without his knowledge. Compton learns what Lucia has done and rushes to the ranch. There he encounters Seddon, her father, and shoots him. Larry Redfern arrives and undertakes to rescue Eleanor but is also shot by Compton. Compton and his men are arrested for the shooting by Moggs and a posse of citizens. Rand comes to his place and discovers that Larry has been shot. Larry mentions Compton's name and Rand goes on the trail of his enemy. He arrives immediately after the arrest. He warns them to draw and before any of them can fire, shoots down Compton and his men, one after the other, killing them. Rand is then arrested on the charge of robbing the stage but Eleanor gives her evidence that Compton was the real leader of the band and proves that the horse which Compton rode was not Rand's horse at all. Seddon recovers from his wound and tells Eleanor the truth about Bud. Larry also recovers. Rand and Eleanor are married.

Locale: Anywhere in the cattle country.

Picture High Lights: Suspense, love interest, action throughout; good Western atmosphere.

The Devil to Pay

By Francis Nemmo Greene

Character of Story: Mystery.

Theme: Retribution.

Characters: Dare Keeling; Larry Keeling, her brother; Brent Warren, her fiance; Cullen Grant, district attorney; Dr. Jernigan, George Roan, a dead man; Mrs. Roan, his wife; attorneys, clubmen, etc.

The Plot: George Roan has just been hanged for the murder of a bank cashier working in the same bank as himself. Brent Warren, prominent society man and president of the bank, is indicted by the Grand Jury as an accessory to the murder—a count which is changed to murder in the first degree. He is admitted to bail. His friends rally to his support. The case is given a peculiar piquancy by the fact that the district attorney, Cullen Grant, was formerly the fiance of Dare Keeling, the girl who is engaged to Warren. Dare and Cullen have quarreled because he did not approve of her having other men friends, and in her anger she has broken off their acquaintance altogether. Her brother still remains on good terms with him however. Warren asks Larry to come to his house as his secretary and sets him to work on some geneological research regarding the Warren family. Young Keeling is convinced that Warren wants him only for his company. Dare sticks to Warren splendidly, and goes about with him until her brother protests that she is making herself conspicuous. A strange voice calls on the telephone and greatly agitates Warren. Keeling consults a detective who advises him to notify him at once when the voice calls again and to have the central office note all calls. The call comes again. Central reports that it is from the bank which is closed with not even a watchman in it. Nobody is found in the bank however Keeling discovers that Warren has some incriminating letters in his safe—letters from Roan which apparently accuse Warren of having helped him rob the bank for speculation. Keeling is now convinced of Warren's guilt, but his sister firmly believes that he is innocent. Mrs. Roan haunts Dare Keeling trying to speak to her in private, but Dare will have nothing to do with her and, like most of the public, believes her to be unbalanced mentally. Grant controls the fortune of Dare Keeling until she reaches her majority. She tries to get hold of her money to give it to Warren to help him in his case but Grant will not give it up. It develops that Warren has been speculating heavily and losing. An examination of the bank proves that the accounts are short by more than $100,000. Warren persuades Dare to elope with him but Grant gets wind of it and with Larry overtakes them where their machine has broken down. Grant agrees to allow Warren to return to the city of his own accord, but states that he will be arrested on his return. The arrest is made. When the case comes on for trial Roan, the man who was hanged, is called as witness. He has been cut down early by his friend Jernigan, acting as the county physician and restored. On promise of clemency he turns state's evidence against Warren, proving him guilty of both embezzlement and murder. Warren shoots himself. Dare, thankful for her escape, marries Grant.

Locale: Any American city.

Picture High Lights: Good element of suspense and good opportunity for emotional acting.

"YOU love your country enough to die for her, Milt; but do you love her enough to live for her? It means to be odious in every eye, to eat out your heart alone—for you can't tell your wife, nor boy, nor friend."

And in that black day when it became too late to tell, in all the United States, in all the world just one man wrote to Milt Shanks—his friend Abraham Lincoln.

Here's the beat of the human heart translated into a dramatic entertainment that has never been equalled in the history of pictures! No man, woman or child can look at "The Copperhead" and fail to feel its tender pathos, its vital appeal, its uplift of emotion.

Truly it is the one great American picture of today! And now is the time to show it!

A NEW MARK TWAIN-PARAMOUNT ARTCRAFT PICTURE

PRESENTED BY JESSE L LASKY

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

Through all the years—they live!

As real, as fresh, as appealingly human today as when Mark Twain—his eyes a-twinkle—called them from his heart and wrote them down forever in the world's greatest romance of youth.

Freckle-faced Huckleberry Finn; Tom Sawyer with his heart of adventure; "Pap" Finn and his jug of rum; those seedy old rapscallions, the "King" and the "Duke"; Black Jim, the widow Douglas, Aunt Polly, and sweet-faced Mary Jane.

Now, in this irresistible photoplay, they live before your very eyes, with all their charm, their escapades, their lovable, laughable ways.

A tale of other days on the Mississippi—pulsing with a hundred immortal adventures—mellowed with much laughter—softened by a few tears.

The Surest Gauge of Results

The surest gauge of the paying power of an advertising medium is the volume of advertising which it carries month after month, year after year.

For nothing succeeds like success, and when one advertiser gets results it doesn't take long for others to find it out.

That is the secret of the lead which the Cleveland Plain Dealer has so long maintained in motion picture advertising—your safe guide to maximum results in Cleveland and Northern Ohio.

During 1919 The Plain Dealer carried 643,874 lines of Motion Picture advertising and gained over 1918—233,394 lines, which is 155,582 lines more than the second paper carried and 37,282 lines more than the second paper gained.

The rich, progressive 2,800,000 population territory served by The Plain Dealer is second to none as a field for the Motion Picture advertiser, and can be covered adequately with The Plain Dealer alone.

ANOTHER GREAT SPECIAL PRODUCTION

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: "Wonderful" is the word that accurately describes this screenization of Emerson Hough's great story "The Sagebrusher." A photoplay masterpiece demands many essentials and Benjamin B. Hampton's picture qualifies in every respect. First it has an appealing story and a notable cast.... Box-office angle: Metropolitan, big puller and tremendously pleasing; Elite, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing; Family, big puller and wonderfully pleasing; Workers, strong puller and tremendously pleasing.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Benjamin B. Hampton's newest Great Authors' special, Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher" is the story of a rough diamond with a big heart. It will please the great majority of screen patrons. Replete with dramatic intensity with much of the spectacular and melodramatic elements.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: Benjamin B Hampton's big new production "The Sagebrusher" brings another powerful author to the screen in the person of Emerson Hough. This picture has a following booked in advance on the author's popularity.

WID'S DAILY: In his story of love and faith Emerson Hough has the truly human touch containing all of the emotions expected in such a fine theme. There are enough thrills to flavor and they will keep the interest sustained. Be sure and tell your audience this is the first Emerson Hough novel ever screened.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: "The Sagebrusher" is highly commendable and worth seeing from every angle. It combines story, director and players in a strong attraction; a worthy successor to "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold."

Why We Refused to Sell for One Hundred Thousand Dollars

THE day after "Empty Arms" was turned over to us by Director Frank Reicher, a well-known distributor tendered us a point-blank offer of $100,000 guarantee on the sale. This offer did not appeal to us, because we had spent over sixty thousand dollars in producing the picture and were cognizant of the fact that, in it, we have one of those master productions that strikes the industry about every three or four years. But the distributor insisted that his offer was merely a guarantee; that the amount "Empty Arms" could command, might run close to seven figures.

Then, in the course of the discussion, the head of our advertising department apologized for interrupting us, and said: "It is peculiar that you should offer $100,000 for 'Empty Arms,' for I have here in my hand my Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, which I was just about to hand to Mr. Park."

"What is the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet?" asked the well-known distributor.

"It's nothing more than a book of printed suggestions that show the exhibitor who books 'Empty Arms' how easily he can put it over, and I consider it worth $100,000," replied our advertising manager.

At first, we must confess, we thought the A. M. had lost his reason. We knew that he had been working day and night inventing valuable promotion "stunts," but, after ten minutes of discussion, he convinced us that he was right.

At parting, the well-known distributor raised his offer to a sum that the average independent producer would sell three pictures for; but in justice to

EMPTY ARMS

THE SENSATION OF THE CENTURY

we were forced to reject.

On the following pages, we publish a brief digest of the extraordinary history and superlative qualities of "Empty Arms," being thoroughly convinced that, among the intelligent film buyers of America, there is going to be the most spirited bidding in years. All exhibitors, States Right men and chain operators are invited to communicate at once with

How Lester Park and Edward Whiteside produced "EMPTY ARMS"

AFTER a hundred or more stories suitable for screen production were submitted to us by the foremost authors of America, we selected the script of a young writer, Willard King Bradley, as the most original in the batch, and the most original we had seen in years. The story, dealing with the Gargantuan question of Motherhood, demanded the finest artistic talent procurable. Frank Reicher, responsible for many Paramount and Metro successes, was chosen to direct "Empty Arms," because we figured that he alone could handle a great number of its exceedingly difficult scenes, the majority of which were at once intensely dramatic and unusually delicate. Mr. Reicher immediately surrounded himself with the foremost technicians. Gail Kane, famous star of screen and stage, who had just closed in the Broadway success, "The Woman in Room 13," was signed to star; then a powerful cast, including Thurston Hall, J. Herbert Frank and other well-known screen celebrities, was engaged to support her. The picture was made; and, as we watched its progress, we believed that we had a master production. But we were not content to rest on our own judgment. We called in that famous editorial writer, Dr. Frank Crane, who contributed his unique services to the thought side of the picture.

It is the easiest thing in the world for a producer to deal in twelve-cylinder adjectives, and to megaphone it from the housetops that his picture is supreme. We are so confident of the success of "Empty Arms" that we are more than willing to simply place it in the hands of the buyers and exchange men, and let the screen do the talking. We are so certain that they will say that we have *under*estimated it, that we will stake our future success on it! Which is saying volumes.

THE production alone will stand on its merits. But there is something else we have to offer which makes "Empty Arms" a picture plus. This "something else" is the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, prepared by our advertising department.

The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet

WHEN the advertising manager entered the conference immediately after the well-known distributor made his original offer, he said:

"The idea in 'Empty Arms' is one never before touched. Its originality is worth a great deal. But the idea is of such importance at this time, that I find our picture can command over a hundred thousand dollars worth of advertising in every important city.

"How do I know? Well, I have written to newspaper editors, civic authorities, educators and men and women in public life, club officials, doctors, lawyers and other professionals. In every city, interest in the subject contained in 'Empty Arms' is so great, that, if we were to try to arouse this interest with paid advertising, it would cost over a hundred thousand dollars to do it."

The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet Tells the Whole Story; It Covers the Box-Office Possibilities of "Empty Arms" from Every Angle. A Copy of It Will Gladly be Sent Only to Those Exhibitors and States Right Buyers Who Personally Sign On Their Business Stationery a Request for It.

by WINCHELL SMITH

Screen adaptation by Graham Baker Directed by TOM TERRISS

The Greatest, Most Human Production in the Annals of the Screen

"The Fortune Hunter" is a clarion call to those groping men whose brains are asleep at the switch. The laggard, the failure, the ne'er-do-well who still hopes for success, will find in this great picture of American life the needed inspiration that will remove the blinders. The picture carries a clear, strong message of hope.

"The Fortune Hunter" is human nature laid bare; it is a throbbing page torn from real life—the life that all of us lead, but that many of us never see below the surface. And it's a powerful love story.

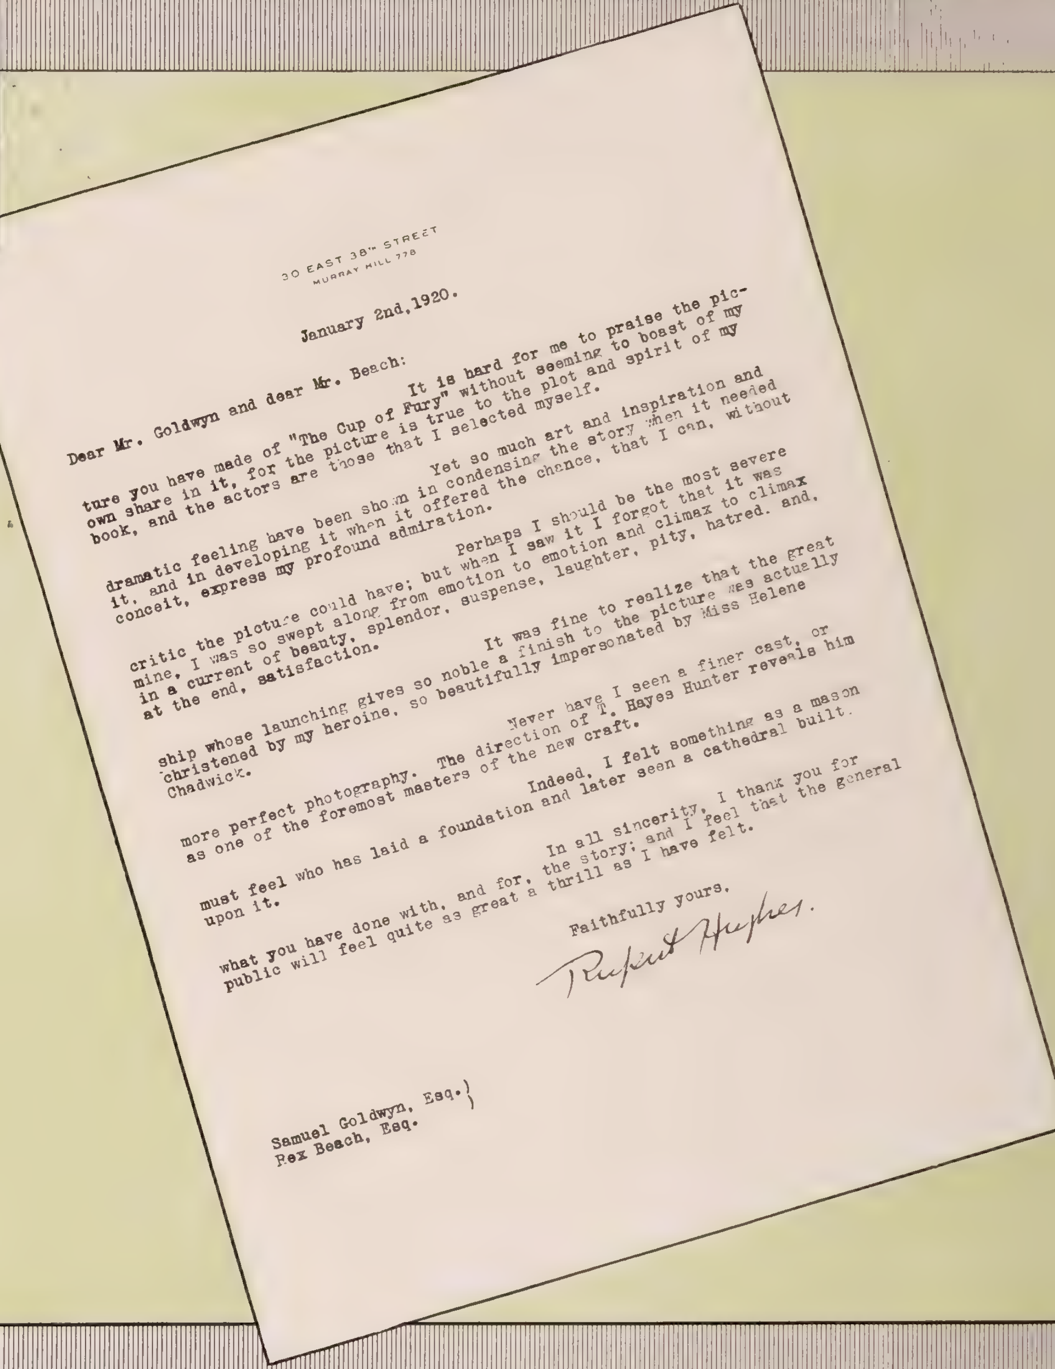
TWO LETTERS FROM



30 EAST 38TH STREET
MURRAY HILL 778

January 2nd, 1920.

Dear Mr. Goldwyn and dear Mr. Beach:

It is hard for me to praise the picture you have made of "The Cup of Fury" without seeming to boast of my own share in it, for the picture is true to the plot and spirit of my book, and the actors are those that I selected myself.

Yet so much art and inspiration and dramatic feeling have been shown in condensing the story when it needed it, and in developing it when it offered the chance, that I can, without conceit, express my profound admiration.

Perhaps I should be the most severe critic the picture could have; but when I saw it I forgot that it was mine, I was so swept along from emotion to emotion and climax to climax in a current of beauty, splendor, suspense, laughter, pity, hatred. and, at the end, satisfaction.

It was fine to realize that the great ship whose launching gives so noble a finish to the picture was actually christened by my heroine, so beautifully impersonated by Miss Helene Chadwick.

Never have I seen a finer cast, or more perfect photography. The direction of T. Hayes Hunter reveals him as one of the foremost masters of the new craft.

Indeed, I felt something as a mason must feel who has laid a foundation and later seen a cathedral built upon it.

In all sincerity, I thank you for what you have done with, and for, the story; and I feel that the general public will feel quite as great a thrill as I have felt.

Faithfully yours,

Rupert Hughes.

Mr. Rupert Hughes,
30 East 38th Street,
New York City, N.Y.

My dear Rupert Hughes:-

I have seen "The Cup of Fury" and it is a great picture. Permit me to compliment you upon achieving such a splendid result with your first Eminent Authors production.

In "The Cup of Fury" you have accomplished the end Mr. Goldwyn and I had in mind in organizing the Eminent Authors Pictures Co., viz. you have told a great story upon the screen with the same force, the same directness, the same artistry that marks your writings.

We contend that the screen needs and will welcome great stories, famous plays told in the language of their creators. And "The Cup of Fury" is a great, a significant story for, aside from its clean, strong love interest and swift, absorbing action it deals with perhaps the most vital problem of our national life, the relation of Capital and Labor.

It is not a war story but a story of conditions arising from the war. Above all it is timely. It is a story of today, a story of American determination to overcome odds and accomplish the impossible. Technical detail, cast and direction are splendid and I feel sure it will meet with a tremendous popular response.

Again with hearty congratulations I beg to remain.

Sincerely yours,

Rex Beach

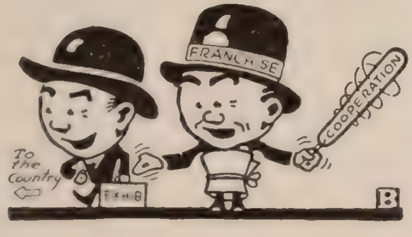
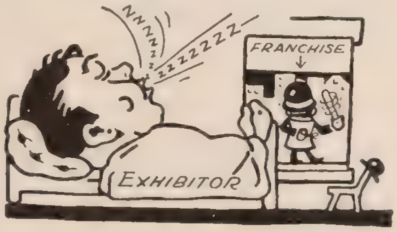
The cave man lived an uncertain life.
He depended entirely upon his own prowess.

Most Exhibitors are mighty uncertain about their futures. They have to fight each other and they have to fight the predatory producer-distributor gangs.

The Big Idea is for the independent exhibitor to get into a gang of his own, a gang that won't skin him alive, a gang in which he can be as big as any other man.



The fellows in OUR GANG can take a vacation occasionally, because their franchise in our organization will protect them.



Our franchise holders can sleep o' nights because old Policeman Franchise is always on the job.

If you're a live one we want you in our gang

"Nothing half way about "In Old Kentucky"—it's great. A wonderful box-office bet. You ought to clean up big. The plot is one long succession of thrills."—Wid's.

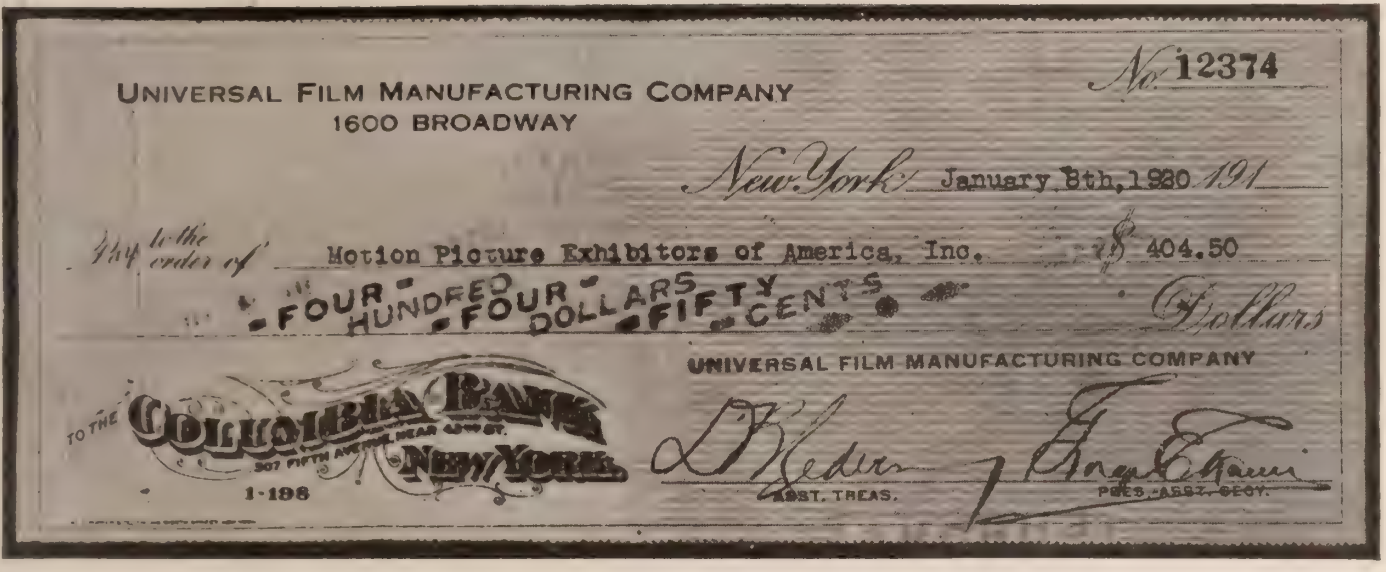
MONEY TALKS!



No. 12374

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY
1600 BROADWAY

New York January 8th,1920 191

Pay to the order of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc. $404.50

FOUR HUNDRED FOUR DOLLARS FIFTY CENTS Dollars

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY

TO THE COLUMBIA BANK
307 FIFTH AVENUE NEAR 43RD ST.
NEW YORK

ASST. TREAS.
PRES.-ASST. SECY.

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS:—

The money represented by the above check is the first ever paid to exhibitors for the showing of educational and industrial pictures which they have received without charge. This amount was paid to be distributed among exhibitors for the showing of HEADS WIN in Chicago and vicinity.

The arrangement between the UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY and the MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA, INC., under which this money was paid is NOT AN EXCLUSIVE ONE AND NEVER HAS BEEN. ANY OTHER PRODUCER OF MOTION PICTURES IS AT LIBERTY TO ENJOY THE SAME PRIVILEGES THAT THE UNIVERSAL HAS AND DOES ENJOY IN REGARD TO EDUCATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL FILMS.

In Reply to Slurring Charges Made in Recent Trade Paper Advertisements

1—First, the so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association has failed to answer any of the pertinent questions, evidently for reasons best known to themselves.

2—Mr. H. A. Mintz ranks as one of the high-grade attorneys of New England. The contract as proposed was arranged so that the Association in the event of any slip-up would not be involved with heavy legal fees.

3—As a matter of fact no contract was ever executed. It was submitted to the Cleveland gentleman in a tentative form and he promptly turned it over to the men who were trying to tear down one big exhibitors' movement for personal reasons. It was decided best not to further consult Mr. Lustig, and as president I am only too pleased that this gentleman has tendered his resignation. It would have shown better business ethics to have resigned first than to have used a committee membership against the best interests of the Association.

4—The League would have made a large sum of money had the New York Tribune seen fit to continue negotiations. Under the proposed contract the League would have received the first $10,000 earned and continuous profits thereafter.

5—If this so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association's idea of commercial independence means the censorship of the screen by a self constituted committee, then I am very glad that I stand for open competition whereby each and every exhibitor will receive direct remuneration for the use of his screen for advertising purposes.

6—As to comparison of records, we are glad to have the Exhibitors of the country decide as to the calibre of the men concerned in this controversy, and to their honest intent for the best interests of the industry.

WARNING

The entire Motion Picture Industry is hereby warned of an attempt by certain distributing agencies to offer a series of productions as being the works of David Wark Griffith.

For the protection of all—AND ESPECIALLY EXHIBITORS—and that they may not be misled by these offerings, Mr. Griffith has issued the following statement:

> "TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY:
> "All genuine Griffith productions carry the initials, D. G. and the written name GRIFFITH on the main title and on all important sub-titles and any motion picture offered without these trademarks not only is unauthentic but is being foistered on the exhibitors and the public in an effort to give the impression that it was personally directed.
> "In justice to all concerned, I hereby ask all exhibitors, for the protection of themselves and their patrons, not to advertise any picture as a Griffith production unless it carries the above trademarks stamped in the film."
> (Signed) D. W. Griffith

For the information of all exhibitors, the following list of GENUINE GRIFFITH PRODUCTIONS is submitted:

RELEASED THROUGH D. W. GRIFFITH SERVICE:

"The Mother and the Law"

RELEASED THROUGH FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY:

NOTE The picture called "Tiger Girl," recently advertised as a Griffith production, was not directed by Mr. Griffith, but by Paul Powell, and it is an injustice to Mr. Powell as well as to Mr. Griffith to call it a Griffith picture. As a matter of record, the picture is an old print formerly called "The Lily and the Rose" and is now being resurrected presumably for the purpose of trading on Mr. Griffith's name.

"BREAK AWAY"

Here's a chance for any State Right Buyer to make much additional money.

All that's necessary is that he must have a little—excuse the expression—"CRUST." He must have nerve enough to step off the beaten track and gather in the business that is patiently waiting for him to come and get it.

He must have confidence in himself; as much confidence as we have in "WHOLESOME PICTURES"—and that means plenty.

Realize this: Theatres have no monopoly on the showing of motion pictures. Clubs, Churches, Schools, Community Centers, and many other organizations are searching far and wide for suitable film, the kind that will fill their own peculiar demand. And "WHOLESOME PICTURES" fit right into their ideas—they're clean, well made, and away out of the ordinary.

If you've got confidence in yourself and your organization; if you're game enough to "Start something" for yourself—get in touch with us. A postcard will do it—we have a telephone in active service, and there's a Western Union office in your town.

We Are Making Them Pay!

The sensation of the week, we might say of the year, or indeed, of all motion picture history, is the payment of money to exhibitors for the use of their screens, by film producers who have trespassed on those screens in the past.

Beat the Tom, Tom!

Sound the Bugles! !

Set Off the Fireworks! ! !

To celebrate this great event of the exhibitor actually getting something for the use of his own property.

THE WHY AND WHEREFORE OF IT ALL

The Screen Protection Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America through their exposure of the screen "snipers" are responsible—solely and entirely responsible for this belated effort to pay the exhibitor for the use of his screen. But for the fight of the Screen Protection Committee the exhibitors would never have received a penny.

In contrast with this sudden, apparent willingness to pay, we ask you to read the letter sent by W. H. Linton, state treasurer of the New York exhibitors' league to the executive secretary of that organization which was sent on January 5th, 1920. Here is the letter, which speaks for itself:

> Utica, N. Y., Jan. 5, 1920.
> Mr. S. I. Berman,
> Executive Secretary,
> Motion Picture Exhibitors League, State of New York.
> 708 Times Bldg.,
> New York City.
> Dear Mr. Berman:
> This is to acknowledge the receipt of check on account, dated December 31st, 1919, and given to me at the executive committee meeting of our state league at Buffalo, N. Y., on January 2, 1920, in payment for showing of reel "Dame Fashion Decrees."
> Our members who have run this reel say that it was well liked by their patrons, especially the women. It seems to me an ideal production, in every way up to our standards, which provide that every such reel must have a predominant entertainment value and under no circumstances afford a cause of just complaint to any of our patrons.
> Such being the case I want to go on record as saying that in my opinion it marks a new departure both as to exhibitor control of all screen advertising and as to the possibilities of financing exhibitors' organizations. In our state, at least, no seat tax levy or other antiquated methods of taxing the exhibitors directly will be needed hereafter.
> I am glad to note you have other films of the same standard ready for our exhibitors.
> No one in this state knows better than we do here in Utica what the right kind of an exhibitors' organization can do. It was through the efforts of the organization that we were enabled to open our theaters on Sunday.
> I expect to see you and the balance of the boys at Albany about the middle of the month to take up legislative matters.
> Sincerely yours,
> WM. H. LINTON,
> Treasurer, Motion Picture Exhibitors League,
> State of New York.

The activities of the Screen Protection Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have started the ball rolling, and if you will guard your screen so that no industrial films or advertising inserts appear without your being paid for them through your state league it will not be very long before every state league in the country will have sufficient funds to carry on the important work that is necessary this year to safeguard the interests and investments of the exhibitor.

Bear in mind that under our plan the control of all screen advertising remains in exhibitors' hands.

EVERY CENT OF MONEY DERIVED FOR SCREEN ADVERTISING GOES TO YOUR STATE LEAGUE, to do with as they see fit. No part of the revenue is diverted to any more or less mythical or nominal "national" organization which does not know your local problems and which as far as the record shows, has never done anything to benefit the exhibitor in a national way.

The Screen Protection Committee has just begun to fight and will keep up its activities to get a full return to the exhibitor for the use of his screen.

No doubt about the exhibitors of the country being with us heart and soul.

Here is the evidence.

The following exhibitors' organizations have endorsed the activities of the Screen Protection Committee, and are cooperating with us:

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF NEW YORK STATE

To the Industry in general:—

The poster is the one direct medium through which tickets are sold to the public. To that statement the exhibitor, the distributor, and the producer all agree, and when these three elements agree to anything concerning motion pictures it is certain to be true.

The better a poster is the more crowded the auditorium will be: a great poster is a tremendous asset; a poor one is a liability. An exhibitor has a definite and positive method whereby he can discover whether his posters are good, bad or indifferent. Check them up against the box-office receipts. This is the acid test, and there is no surer one.

It is the test by which the RITCHEY poster has been tried time and time again, and the tabulated results prove the RITCHEY poster to be the greatest poster possible to execute. The exhibitor who is not getting them is losing a large percentage of money to which he is justly entitled.

A realization of that fact should lead to an insistent demand for the greatest motion picture poster made anywhere in the world—the RITCHEY poster.

Americanization—and Past Lessons

¶ A very important meeting was held in New York last Sunday between Secretary Franklin K. Lane and leading representatives of the industry.

An official account of the transactions of the meeting appears in this issue.

Because, however, of the high importance of the event—to this country and to the motion picture we take the liberty of setting forth here the matter laid before us by Secretary Lane, and what appears to be the concensus of opinion of the producers, distributors and exhibitors present as to how the picture can best serve the high purpose asked of it.

The purpose is the Americanization of the inhabitants of this country.

We are all aware of the tremendous upheaval that has followed the war: we appreciate, almost every day, the gravity of the situation.

We all have our various beliefs upon the various social and economic phases of the disorder. That is our blessed and inalienable privilege as Americans. There is one point however, upon which we all agree: We are Americans. We have no division of opinion here.

We believe in the Constitution of the United States. We worship this land of opportunity. America, as Secretary Lane so eloquently and simply said, is the land of struggle, the struggle of the individual to better himself, to progress freely toward those ideals to which man has aspired since the birth of the human race. We respect our institutions. We know that good government comes out of the expressed will of the majority. We will live up to the law and order imposed by our Government. We will aim to give back, through allegiance and patriotism at least, a measure of the fruits we so freely take.

It is the doctrine of Americanism which must be given, unmistakably, to the youth of the land whether native or foreign born, to all of our population.

The campaign of Americanization is to be a campaign of pro-Americanism, not anti—anything except as anything is Anti-American.

This important work is not to be accomplished quickly. To do that would be to make the effort obvious and there must be no appearance of propaganda in this campaign.

It will be possible however, in many dramatic subjects from now on to breathe Americanism through themes, sub-titles, incidents and scenes. It will also be possible to exclude from dramatic subjects that which creates false and bad ideas.

The producers have pledged themselves to this end, and much may be done.

The matter is a most important one and requires the most delicate handling. The entertainment value of the picture must and can always be kept uppermost. There must be no preaching. There ought to be constant supervision by Secretary Lane's committee or by some other competent body of men.

At the height of the crisis in Russia during the war a flood of Government pictures were turned loose. They were allied propaganda. They were labelled official pictures. And they defeated their aim because of their label. At the same time a Griffith-made picture was distributed by the American Department of State. It was a dramatic picture, with the theme of American democracy. It was handled as a straight commercial film and more than fifty copies of it were found necessary to meet the expressed demand of the Russian audiences.

Speaking Editorially

No Politics—Gentlemen!

THE motion picture may face a serious problem this presidential year.

The political managers are well aware of the propaganda power of the screen. That was amply demonstrated during the war; we trust it is again to be proven in the great issue of Americanization.

There will be a big political battle this year.

It is but natural, perhaps, for the campaign managers to turn envious eyes upon the motion picture, to hope to accomplish much through its million fold, potent circulation.

In view of which it is highly necessary that it be clearly and distinctly known that the motion picture is not, never has been and never must be partisan.

A newspaper may be partisan. That is to say it may and generally does indicate editorially its political beliefs. It is careful however, if it has any worth, not to color its news and if it carries out-and-out political propaganda it labels it advertising.

The screen, however, is everyman's reading-room; the picture house is everyman's hall. The picture producer is a maker of entertainment not an exponent of political beliefs. THE MOTION PICTURE IS A FREE AGENT.

And the motion picture must remain free.

If the screen carries out-and-out political propaganda; if, even such propaganda is skilfully camouflaged, there will be but one conclusion upon the part of the public and that is that someone has "sold out."

The blame will be laid either directly upon the picture theatre or upon the maker of the film. The theatre will catch it first and hardest.

The newspapers will take up the hue and cry of the public and in the end the opinion will be well founded that the motion picture has "sold out."

And that is where the real and large harm will be done—in the lowering of all motion picture standards in the public eye.

As a matter of fact if political propaganda appears upon any screen it is prima facie evidence of the fact that someone has "sold out."

The propaganda of any political party is straight advertising—nothing else. Someone puts it forth for value received; there's no mistake about that. Someone got paid for it.

The innocent exhibitor is betrayed; the public is fooled; the name and fame of the motion picture is trailed in the mire.

And it won't work.

Anyone who thinks that one hundred and ten million people can be fooled in this way is himself a fool or a knave or both.

The recoil hurts all along the line—the exhibitor first, the name of the producer next; but the greatest recoil comes upon the motion picture itself.

And that cannot be tolerated.

It is, as we have said, a serious problem. Concealed propaganda may be accepted unwillingly. A lot of vigilance is demanded of the editors of dramatic pictures, news reels, cartoons and picture magazines.

We who make pictures, distribute them or show them, all who have a direct part in this industry are the trustees of the motion picture.

It is a serious trusteeship.

We can afford to be serious about it.

Cooperative Newspaper Advertising

THE Holyoke Daily Transcript, which has raised its pic theatre advertising from about ten inches a day two three years ago to as high as two and three hundred inc day, has this to say:

"We have always contended that the producers and excha do not interest themselves sufficiently in the exhibitor's cause. them it seems to be a case of take everything and give nothing the producers and exchanges would only cooperate with the hibitors and help them to pay for their newspaper advertising tainly the movie game would grow by leaps and bounds, altho even as it is, it is today one of the most important industries i country."

There are difficulties in the way of cooperative advertising; the fault has been the exhibitor's, and that of the producer or change. Just the same, we believe this difficulty will be ironed The services of competent exploitation men operating out of exchanges seems largely the answer.

The problem is so largely a local one that it is hardly fai the newspapers to put it up to the producers until they are equi to handle it locally. To ask all producers to advertise national the newspapers on all releases is to ask the well-nigh impos Except for policy purposes, the productions are few and far bet that would justify such expenditures. And even in these case value of the advertising is seriously impaired in every city in w it fails to synchronize with local exhibitors' booking plans.

We believe the industry and the newspapers must wait on final development of the idea of individual exchange exploit men for a solution that will hold.

He came; he saw—and the latest report we have is that on the way to becoming a "fan."

All because—he saw the pictures.

It's an easily-won victory that the motion picture can secure time it succeeds in inducing its opponents to come into actual co with the screen and view with open eyes its performance and sibilities. It is aiming at the herculean to seek to wring ju from those who desire to remain blind.

Americanization—And Past Lessons

We can well apply in this after war campaign what we ha well learned about propaganda pictures.

Film Men—Meet R. S. Cole

Motion Picture News Presents a Real "Beat" in Presenting the Reticent Robertson-Cole Executive to the Industry—The Introduction Tendered

BY WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

EVER hear of a man very prominent in the film trade who has never been interviewed, whose photo has never appeared in the trade press, whose very name has not been published except as it hyphened n the firm name?

Here's a novel situation—indeed.

You know, very well, of Robertson-Cole.

You've heard a good deal of—Cole.

Here, for the first time, is R. S. Cole, ini- ials and all. Meet him, face to face, in an xclusive interview in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

He's a very admirable type, if we do say it. uiet, gracious dignified, straightforward, siness-like—and likable. He smiles with s eyes. You'll get a square deal from this nd of a man—else none at all. That's certain.

There's no pose, no bombast about him. 's a great relief for instance to hear him y that he doesn't know all about the film usiness. He doesn't aim to control it. He akes no great promises. He admits he has ade mistakes, but they have been corrected, nd all in all he's perfectly satisfied with hat Robertson-Cole did last year. A foundation—the right foundation was laid; money as made, plans were made. So 1920 looks d to him because you can rear quite a ructure with foundation, plans and money when all are so exceedingly solid.

We'll say so.

HYPHEN COLE, as we shall have to refer to him in the past tense, came up to Film Square from lower Broadway ore than a year ago. He had back of him e good name, ample capital and world-wide ganization of a firm aggressive and successful in the general export business.

He had decided that films could well be lded to his wares abroad; and they were, ith such success, that he next decided to ter the domestic field.

This was a horse of another color, as he ely admits. He found it a big proposition d one that had to be mastered in a short ace of time. Money had to be spent ishly. But he wasn't worried about capi-, and he had a quiet patience, backed by firm and sensible conviction that if films uld be sold so successfully abroad because a fine selling organization that another e selling organization would make films here. And so it has.

Mr. Cole has just returned from a three onths' trip to Europe. Sir William Jury iose Jury Imperial Pictures, Ltd., handles e entire Robertson-Cole output in Great itain was about to come with him but will it these shores a little later.

SIR WILLIAM JURY has always been a most interesting personage to us. As William Jury, he built up a remarkable r ting business throughout Great Britain. It was built upon confidence—confidence between William Jury and the exhibitor. The square deal dominated every transaction. William Jury told, at least tried to tell the exhibitor just what the picture really was and in time the exhibitor grew to believe him. A Jury picture became a Jury picture always.

R. S. Cole

When the war came William Jury gave the government his complete services. When he came back to films, as Sir William, the Jury distributing business hadn't lost a bit of its hold despite strenuous competition. It went right on, just the same, because the exhibitors' confidence, won and held, was back of it.

We have an idea that the personality, character and business policies of Sir William Jury and R. S. Cole are cut out of the same cloth.

We have, in fact, a very strong hunch that the trade will come to know this.

AND now we'll let Mr. Cole do a little talking. He doesn't say much, but it sounds like business.

"I realize that films differ from other products but business laws never differ. So good business policies will succeed in the film business.

"I believe, for instance, in business concentration. We therefore concentrate upon the distributing business. We don't produce nor do we exhibit. We devote our entire resources to the selling of pictures, for the producer and for the exhibitor to his public. Next, we concentrate upon each picture, being careful never to handle too much product, for that detracts just so much from concentrated effort.

"We are independent distributors. I like to be independent, and I consider it the best business policy. I don't want entangling alliances."

Not many words; but a lot of meat in them. Isn't there?

THAT the subject matter of William A. Johnston's editorial in the Jan. 17 issue of the NEWS, "Fair Play to Newspapers," is in the mind of others in the industry who recognize the importance of treating the daily on a "fifty-fifty" basis is indicated in an article by Marshall Neilan, which it is stated was in course of preparation when the NEWS' editorial appeared.

Some of the points Mr. Neilan makes follow:

"The public shops in the newspaper for its picture entertainment as well as it does for dry goods, in its search for the best.

"The newspaper has become more closely affiliated with the screen as a result of this discrimination on the part of the public.

"The family buys its screen entertainment from the newspaper pages and does not take a chance and 'walk around the corner.'

"The daily newspaper is the best medium for the exhibitor in reaching the family with local advertising."

Zukor to Remain Head of F. P.-Lasky

Rumors That He Was Getting Out, That Wall Street Interests Dictate Policies, or That Company Wishes to Dictate to Exhibitors Denied

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, at a meeting on January 14th at the offices of the Famous Players, issued a positive and unconditional denial, in the presence of representatives of the trade press, of a number of rumors which have been circulated in the street concerning the administration of the corporation of which Mr. Zukor is the executive. Mr. Zukor absolutely denied that Wall Street interests were asserting themselves in the administration of the corporation's business and policies, and that certain moneyed powers were interfering with the established customs and methods of the board of directors. He branded as absolutely groundless the story, somewhat prevalent of late, that he intended severing his connections with the Famous Players-Lasky organization. And finally he expressed himself as anxious to have it known and understood that Famous Players was not contemplating the establishment of a monopoly in the exhibiting field of the industry.

Zukor's Statement

In refuting the story that the directors of the organization were meeting with interference on the part of Wall street interests, Mr. Zukor said: "About a year ago I felt that due to the policy and methods of certain forces in the industry the producer was going to experience some difficulty in maintaining a free and assured outlet for the pictures that he had produced. In order to assure itself of a permanent outlet for its product, Famous Players, at my urging, authorized a new issue of preferred stock. Two banking firms were interested finally in putting this stock issue on the market. These banking interests enjoyed no special privileges, and exercised no interference with the powers and work of the board of directors. The administration factors of the Famous Players remain the same as they have always been. I am still in charge of the general works and Mr. Lasky still retains charge of the producing end of the business. There have been no changes in the personnel or policies of the old members of the board of directors. Famous Players contemplates no reduction in the quantity of its out-put or the quality of its product We are in favor of 'better' pictures, because better pictures will receive longer runs and because 'better' pictures being the demand of the public we intend to follow the wishes of the picture public, in accordance with the established policy of Famous Players to heed the public demands.

"As for myself, I have no intention of leaving Famous Players. I am still the head of this organization; I have seen it grow up from the bottom. Aside and above the money compensation involved, the progress that this business makes from day to day is my principal elixir. I have absolutely no thought of giving up my position as the head of this organization.

"Finally, Famous Players does not contemplate any attempt to dictate to the exhibitors of the country. Famous

James B. Kelly has taken charge of the Buffalo (N. Y.) territory for the United Picture Theatres of America, succeeding Mr. Homer Howard at that point.

Mr. Kelly until recently held the position of Special Sales Representative under H. M. Berman, General Manager of Exchanges for the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. Mr. Kelly's headquarters being in New York City, he however resigned this position January 1 to accept the management as above stated for the United Theatres.

Arrow Head on Coast

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, New York, has arrived in Los Angeles to visit producers who release their subjects through his concern. This marks his first visit to the coast.

He spent one entire day at the Lasky studio where many old acquaintances gave him the glad hand. The next day was spent at the new Francis Ford studio where Morris R. Schlank is producing a series of two-reel comedies featuring Hank Mann. Here President Shallenberger watched the filming of scenes to Hank's new comedy.

Kane Returns from the Coast

Declares Every City Is Undertheatred; Announcement of Plans Is Coming Soon

AFTER five weeks spent on what was to have been a three weeks' pilgrimage to the Pacific Coast, Arthur Kane has again appeared on Broadway.

"Abounding prosperity has overtaken business in every section which I have visited," said the man who retired as President of Realart Pictures Corporation on November 29, when seen at the Motion Pictures Business Men's Club. "Chicago is great, Los Angeles is outstripping the country in the boom which has struck it. Real estate is on the jump there and they are claiming a population of 700,000. The whole Los Angeles territory, as well as those surrounding, San Francisco, Seattle, Portland and Spokane, never were so good.

"Mammoth building enterprises are on foot in Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco, and it will not be long until the other cities will follow suit.

"This leads me to an observation which applies, and not particularly to the Pacific Coast, but to every large city in this country. I have never yet seen a theatre too large in any of the great cities of the United States. To me this seems an astounding fact. However, it is matched by the assertion that there are not in any of the foremost communities of the country too many houses. In other words, there are not too many seats anywhere. Of course, I refer to downtown conditions. Every large city is undertheatred.

"Now that I am back I shall of course have to get busy and line up things," he answered. "Several matters are pending and I shall close one of them in time to make announcement soon. What concerns me most now is not the magnitude of anything which may be undertaken, but the quality of it. 'Class pays' is a slogan I am going to add to 'Honesty is the best policy.'

Zukor Denies Rumors of Famous-Lasky Changes

Players does not intend to build new theatres or to go in for the construction of new picture houses. The money derived from the recent stock issue will be used to simply better the houses of exhibitors already established who will enter into arrangement with Famous Players whereby Famous Players will be given an assured outlet for their product. Under the present system new contracts are entered into annually with exhibitors. Under the new plan contracts will be entered into which will protect the exhibitor against overcharge on our part and which will assure to us a permanent outlet for our pictures. It is simply our intention to make such an outlet a permanent affair instead of temporary and unassured as now. Our new capital will not be used to establish a monopoly in the exhibiting field; it will not be used to erect new theatres. It will simply be used to better the houses of those exhibitors who enter into the arrangement which will assure to Famous Players a permanent outlet for its pictures."

Secretary and General Manager Tenders Resignation; No Hint of Future Plans

A LONG with the announcement of changes in the executive person- of several large producing or- izations commencing with the year 1 0, comes the announcement that J se J. Goldburg, secretary and gen- l manager of the Frohman Amuse- nt Corporation, of which William L. errill is president, has tendered his ignation to take effect upon the ex- ation of his present contract with t company, January 17.

Ir. Goldburg gave out the follow- statement at the offices of the hman Corporation:

It was only after weeks of careful liberation that I determined not to ew my contract with Mr. Sherrill. relationship has been exceedingly sant but I feel that the opportuni- in the motion picture industry mencing with the year 1920 are so at that my experiences could be de- d to better advantages and that I id or rather should have a broader rtunity to develop my ideas with ther organization.

As to my future connections there is nothing that I would care to reveal now. Frankly I have my ideas, but have not determined upon what connections finally I shall make, excepting that I shall immediately leave for a tour of the United States to study conditions only. This has been an annual custom with me for I believe no motion picture executive upon whose shoulders rests the responsibilities of either production or distribution has the right to avoid keeping in close contact with varying conditions of supply and demand and this can only be studied by close contact with exhibitors and distributors on their own camping ground. I shall also visit Los Angeles at which place I hope to be able to announce definitely my plans for the future, for upon the result of that visit will such plans depend."

Mr. Goldburg leaves on his tour Sunday, January 18, his first stop being Chicago from which place he will proceed direct to Los Angeles and make the various exchange centers on his return east.

Franchise Holders from All Over the Country Gather in Atlantic City for Week's Meeting; Nathan Gordon Favored for Election as President

WITH a full attendance, the convention of the franchise holders of First National Exhibitors' Circuit opened in Atlantic City on Jan. 12, with momentous doings which will have weighty bearing on the industry being scheduled. Election of officers was scheduled for late on the night of Wednesday, Jan. 14, with the feeling prevalent that Nathan Gordon would be placed in the president's chair. The meetings of the directors will occupy the entire week, with a chance of continuing several days into the next week.

On Jan. 13 statements issued predicated a stern fight against the so-called "picture trust," which was claimed to be backed by Wall Street.

Full Attendance on Hand

The meeting at the shore is considered as the most important yet held by First National and precedes the inauguration of Associated First National Pictures and Associated First National Theatres, which were incorporated in Delaware the latter part of November for $16,400,000.

At the request of the franchise holders the capitalization of the Associated First National Theatres was increased from $6,400,000 to $20,000,000, which makes the combined capitalization of the two off-shoots of First National, above the thirty million mark.

All franchise holders were in attendance when the convention opened, as were also representatives of other exhibitor chains which, it is reported, may affiliate with First National. The lobby of the Hotel Traymore, headquarters for the visitors, overflowed with picture folk and picture talk since the early arrivals came into town several days prior to the opening of the sessions, though the first meeting was slow in getting under way.

The initial gathering of the Executive Committee was held the evening of Jan. 13. Meetings were scheduled up to Jan. 17, with the possibility of running over into the following week.

Financial problems were the principal subjects of discussion on the part of franchise holders, particularly in connection with the proposed extension of franchises to many other exhibitors throughout the country, and with the matter of funds for theatre erection. Sharing importance with this was discussion of the working of the booking process known as the Mandelbaum system, which has been in operation in Ohio for two years and which comes down to mutualization of exhibitors along film rental lines. This would tend toward elimination of profits from rentals upon the part of the exchange end of First National, and the graduation of rentals in a comparative way as to population of the center, size of theatre, etc.

The presence of a small army of attorneys along with the franchise holders emphasized the importance of the meeting.

Tom Hamlin

Motion Picture Journal in Experienced Hands

Regional trade publications have been established in many of the distributing centers throughout the country since Tom Hamlin founded Amusements at Minneapolis in 1914. And it is now reported that several prominent exhibitors and leading exchangemen of New York State and Northern New Jersey have organized the Film Bulletin Corporation to publish Motion Picture Journal in the country's most populous section.

Tom Hamlin, for the past eighteen months the reviewer on MOTION PICTURE NEWS, will be editor and publisher. After Mr. Hamlin published Amusements for nearly four years he is said to have written more than two hundred thousand words on marketing and distributing film, and as a result of his campaign he organized Associated Theatres, Inc., with a stock membership of 678 theatres.

Previous to founding Amusements, Mr. Hamlin is reported to have successfully promoted two motion picture expositions, and for two years conducted Thomas J. Hamlin, Inc., a booking exchange at Minneapolis.

Americanization Campaign Under Way

Secretary of the Interior Lane Meets Dominant Figures of Industry and Enlists Country-Wide Aid of the Motion Picture

BEFORE a gathering of the leading figures of the industry, Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane on January 11 addressed an appeal to the motion picture to throw its entire weight into the carrying forward of the Americanization campaign.

The meeting was held at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York, and attended by about a hundred. It marked the second step in organization, a gathering for the same purpose having been held in Washington in the middle of December.

The work has been put in the hands of a committee consisting of Secretary Lane, Adolph Zukor, Lewis J. Selznick, William A. Brady, Harry Crandall and Major Raymond W. Pullman. Mr. Lane is chairman.

Among the speakers were D. W. Griffith, William Fox, Jesse Lasky, Marcus Loew, B. S. Moss, Alfred Black, Samuel Goldwyn, Richard A. Rowland, J. Stuart Blackton and Carl Laemmle and Mark Dintenfass.

Lane's Address

The first results of the picture men's aid will be observed by countrywide observation in motion picture houses of Lincoln's Birthday. The American Legion will cooperate with the theatres in this.

In his address Secretary Lane said in part:

"It is within the power of you men in whose hands the motion picture industry of the country is centered to exceed, if possible, the great work which you carried on during the war—a service, I frankly believe, that was not outdone by any other single agency. There has been a challenge hurled at the people of America, a challenge to prove to the world that the democracy which we have established here on this continent is sufficient unto itself to settle and solve many problems which are a part of our national life.

"This country represents the greatest experiment in living in the world's history. The portals have been thrown open and the men of far countries, from the western front of Europe, from the shores of Italy, from Russia, and from the seven seas, have been invited to come here and weld themselves into our civilization. The task is not an easy one. And yet, I believe, through the medium of motion pictures in their elevating appeal to the finer sense of our peoples—and they reach ten million Americans daily—there can be instilled into these millions the lessons of fortitude and patriotism which it is essential that all must learn.

"I believe the greatest single instance of the soundness of this country's ideals and ideas was the universal acceptance in the spirit of patriotism, of the conscription measures taken during the war. Surely, with so great an object lesson before us, none may lose confidence in our ability to care for the future. And yet, we live in a new world, and it is this new world and its newer obligations of man to man and man to country which must be taught and learned and understood.

"Such a meeting as we are holding here today is a most significant event. Here are you gentlemen, representing a new art, a new means of thought transmission through the medium solely of pictures that move, being called upon to crystalize your efforts to the betterment of great groups of peoples: I wonder if there is any one who can foresee what the motion picture in the next 25 years will become, fully cognizant of what the motion picture has grown to be in the last 25 years."

Ban Film Misrepresentatio

Chicago Ordinance Requires Explicit Billing of Attractions by Theatres

AN ordinance introduced by Alderman George M. Maypole has been passed by the Chicago City Council, requiring theatres to exhibit on billboards on their front the names of pictures being shown at sufficient length to describe their nature. The ordinance is primarily to prevent misrepresentation of pictures or shows.

Watterson R. Rothacker, one of the big men of the industry, in commenting on the ordinance, said:

"I consider this ordinance of great importance to the motion picture industry in general, and because of its importance and because of the fact that Alderman Maypole is the very best friend the motion picture industry has in this territory, I hope that you can give some good publicity to Alderman Maypole and to his ordinance."

The ordinance as passed, reads in part:

STAR AND DIRECTOR SAID TO HAVE LEFT UNIVERSA

RUMORS regarding the Dorothy Phillips-Holubar controversy have been substantiated at the Universal offices in New York. Carl Laemmle has announced definitely that Miss Phillips and Allen Holubar, her husband, have left Universal City.

It appears that Miss Phillips and her husband are still under contract with the Universal and Mr. Laemmle intends to fight them to a finish, and compel them to fulfill their contracts.

"Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips have left Universal City," said Mr. Laemmle.

"They have a contract with us which is as honest and fair an agreement as was ever written. This contract is legally binding. For the principle of the thing I am going to go to every extreme to see that both of them are forced to keep their written word. Their contracts have over a year to run."

No statement of their side of the controversy has been received from Miss Phillips or Mr. Holubar.

Distributing Rights to All Triangle Pictures Included in Deal Which Is Said to Be First of a Number to Strengthen United

AMONG the many rumors of mergers and consolidations that have gone the rounds of late, one of importance has come to a head and the matter closed. The United Picture Productions Corporation has just closed a deal with the Triangle Company whereby United will assume control on January 18th of all Triangle exchanges and the releasing rights to all Triangle pictures.

Announcement of this deal, involving in excess of two million dollars, was made by President J. A. Berst of United and confirmed by P. L. Waters, president of Triangle.

The company taking over Triangle is the new United Picture Productions Corporation affiliated with the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. The stock of the Productions Company is being publicly marketed on the New York Curb.

How Deal Works Out

"I am very much gratified with the arrangement we have just made," stated Mr. Berst. "Assuming control of the Triangle exchanges will enable us to deal directly with the 3,200 theatres that we serve. Not only will it enable us to give better service than was possible under the present method of operation, but we will be able to effect considerable saving which will go into more and better productions.

"Under the terms of our arrangement, we will control the distributing rights to all of the famous Triangle pictures, including the Griffith and Ince productions with such stars as William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Frank Keenan, Norma and Constance Talmadge, the Gish sisters, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Charles Ray, Olive Thomas and the famous Mack Sennett Keystone comedies.

"This arrangement will be a direct benefit to every exhibitor member of the United Picture Theatres. The present revenue from Triangle pictures, with the additional revenue that will be made possible through greatly increased bookings that will result will enable us to operate economically and efficiently.

"Up to the present time, United has been handicapped by the lack of proper distribution facilities. The control of the Triangle exchanges gives us our own distributing organization.

"Pending the settlement of negotiations, it was deemed advisable by us to delay the release of a number of productions. These include the elaborate and decidedly impressive six-part production of 'The Corsican Brothers,' the filmization of Alexander Dumas' world famous story in which Dustin Farnum stars—a picture that has been conceded to be the finest filmed on the coast in years and declared by the critics a feature of extraordinary merit and interest; 'The Eternal Mother,' a modern society drama starring Florence Reed; 'Women Men Forget,' a six-part production made under the direction of John M. Stahl and starring Mollie King; as well as the justly famous Cuckoo Comedies now being pro-

If any remittance is not so received, the shipment will be made C. O. D. In case a check has been mailed and reaches the exchange after shipment has been made, the C. O. D. charge will not be released, but must be paid, and the check will be returned by the exchange if the exhibitor so desires."

Other important rules for the unification of an exchanges' affairs is the matter of changing dates. Under the Board's decision, requests for change in dates booked will not be considered unless the request is received more than fourteen days prior to the date originally scheduled, accompanied by a full payment of the rental and other charges on the feature in question and a new date that is satisfactory to the exchange stipulated.

WHAT gives every indication of being the strongest organization having for its purpose the interests of the motion picture industry in Canada has come into being as a result of a special meeting of the General Managers of the Film Companies in Canada and franchise holders.

The organization will be known as the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors' Association and will be affiliated with the Board of Trade. The meeting was held at the King Edward Hotel on January 8, and far reaching consequences are predicted for the industry in Canada. Matters pertaining to legislation or indeed in any matter that affects the industry as a whole will receive an immediate attention of this new association, and in every way the industry is to be placed upon a new footing. It is recognized that immediate action must be taken on a number of important questions that are now before the industry. Several Shifts in the Realart Ranks

The promotion of Melville E. Maxwell as special representative of Realart Pictures Corporation in the West, is announced this week at the home offices.

Mr. Maxwell's retirement from his present post as manager at Omaha to become special representative will give Cornelius G. Kingsley, Detroit manager for Realart, a long sought opportunity to return to the West. Mr. Kingsley is expected to transfer his activities to Omaha within the next few weeks.

The vacancy at the Detroit office will be filled by Ralph Quive, Realart's veteran San Francisco manager, who has established an enviable record on the coast and who returns to the East after a six years' absence.

The request of Ben F. Simpson, field manager of Realart, to return to San Francisco, following the change in that territory, will bring him back to the scene of his activities prior to joining the Realart organization. At that time Mr. Simpson resigned as chairman of the San Francisco Motion Picture Board of Trade to make his present affiliations. As field manager for Realart Mr. Simpson shared honors with John S. Woody, now general manager, in a record establishment of Realart exchanges throughout the country.

Ohioans Back First National Policy

Meeting Represents 150 Theatres; Plan to Include 300 More Theatres as Sub-Franchise Owners; Mutualization Booking Has Proven Up

RATIFICATION of the new policies launched January 19 by First National Exhibitors' Circuit and plans for increasing the exhibitor membership of their own state organization to include more than three hundred additional theatres, with announcement of the names of exhibitors who have contracted for exclusive booking rights under the new plans, are among the important actions taken by one hundred and twenty-five franchise owners representing one hundred and fifty theatres in the First National Exhibitors' Company of Ohio at a convention in Cleveland last week.

This special meeting was held to take up formally the expansion plans which become effective with the start of official activity by the Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, and the Associated First National Theatres, Incorporated, the two new organizations formed recently by the Circuit with a combined capital of $16,400,000.

Distribution System

The committee of nine appointed a sub-committee, which came to New York for a conference on Friday of last week, following which they went to Atlantic City.

I. Lisbon of Cincinnati was named chairman of the main committee of nine. Members serving with Mr. Lisbon were Gus Sun, proprietor of the Fairbanks and two other theatres in Springfield; C. E. Renner of Youngstown, Charles K. Friedman of the Valentine Theatre in Toledo, M. B. Horowitz of the Fountain Theatre, Clevelend; William Slimm of the Marquee Theatre, Cleveland; Fred Desberg of Loew's Stillman, Cleveland; John Harris, associated with Mr. Lisbon, and Ben L. Heidingsfeld, attorney for the Lisbon-Harris interests.

Operation of the First National franchise in Ohio for the last two years has been along lines similar to the form of activity which will be pursued by the newly created national organization, so that the exhibitor members of the First National Exhibitors' Company of Ohio actually have provided a test case of the efficacy and practicability of several important phases of the system that will be pursued by the Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, and the Associated First National Theatres, Incorporated.

Under the leadership of E. M. Mandelbaum, as president of the Ohio Company, the state organization has grown from a small original membership until today it includes every important first run theatre in the state.

"With unanimous adoption of the expansion plan advocated by First National Exhibitors' Circuit," declares Mr. Mandelbaum, "the membership of sub-franchise owners will be increased until every theatre of consequence in the state will be included, without regard to the age of service used."

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN RESIGNS FROM FAMOUS-LASKY

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN, who was one of the original officers and organizers in the Famous Players Film Company and a director in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has resigned his connection with the corporation and will enter the field of independent producers.

The announcement was not altogether a surprise to Mr. Kaufman's many friends as they were aware that upon the completion of his mission as a special representative of the corporation in Great Britain arranging for the Britsh Studios of the Company he had several times announced his inclination to enter the producing field upon his own resources.

Mr. Kaufman is a brother-in-law of Adolph Zukor. He has been associated with Mr. Zukor in different enterprises for fifteen years.

Mr. Kaufman explains that in severing his connection with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation he was leaving with the very best of feeling between himself and the officers of the company.

He said that soon after his arrival in California, he will make a more detailed announcement of his future plans.

Bullock "Calls" Alfred Black

Will "Put Cards on Table" and Meet Him Any Time; Suggests Arrangements

ALFRED BLACK'S "cards on the table" challenge is accepted by Sam Bullock, temporary secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of America, in the following statement from Cleveland, which speaks for itself:

The writer seeks no controversy, neither can he be drawn into whatever trouble may exist between New York State Exhibitors and Mr. Alfred S. Black. A controversy of this kind means confusion. I hate it, and I therefore absolutely agree with friend Black in his "All the cards are on the table" advertisement, to the extent that I herewith accept his suggestion of the first line, "Let us have Facts," and his closing words, "I demand that you, too, lay your cards on the table, and let the Exhibitors and the Advertisers pass judgment," strikes me favorably. That sounds like business to all exhibitors. No bluffing by anyone.

I can freely forgive Alfred for dubbing our hard-working committee "THE SELF-STYLED EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE," and as temporary secretary of same I will therefore meet Alfred any time, any place, anywhere, in acceptance of his proposition to "come clean," "cards face up," and other sporty phrases somewhat puzzling to a Western Reserve "hick" like me. I therefore make a proposition with no "strings" to it, to wit:

I will nominate four of our committee. Mr. Black may nominate his entire committee of six as named in his "Cards on the Table" demand. I have absolute faith in his six as to their integrity.

These two committees shall furnish all documentary data, facts, evidence and figures bearing upon the question of Industrial film advertising: the protection of the exhibitors' screen from the free use of same by producers and advertisers. Also as a legitimate source of revenue to the screen owner and a means of financing a State or National organization; from the inception of the idea up to the date of Mr. Black's first "announcement" in trade paper issues dated December 20, 1919, and December 18 of Printers Ink, the National Advertisers' Journal.

I also propose as a committee to consider the above "facts" of one representative from each trade paper, whose decision must be based upon documentary evidence and said evidence to be published in their respective papers. Inasmuch as Mr. Black is quoting Mr. Tim Thrift, chairman of the Film Committee of National Advertisers, I would nominate Mr. Tim Thrift as chairman of the aforesaid committee of trade papers. If Mr. Thrift is not available I would suggest Dr. Francis Holley, director of the Washington, D. C., Bureau of Economics, the biggest showman in the world and whose films are distributed by Universal. These gentlemen, being neutral, would have no vote. Either one is eminently fitted, and I won't worry about anything else.

I would favor admitting any producer or organization exhibitor who can show a membership card in SOME organization, as spectators. This is a straightforward answer to Mr. Alfred Black's "demand." I mean business and will not quibble over arrangements. Will split fifty-fifty on expenses. I think the result of such a meeting will be one grand National Organization of Exhibitors —and God knows that we need the steadying influence of a real theatre owners' organization.

Forget personalities. Let us not delay, or, as Alfred says, "Let us find out quick." That suits me and the "20th Century is running." Let's go!

Many of the houses out through the state were obliged to close down for want of lighting facilities, it is stated.

E. C. Smith, manager of the Liberty theatre, Dayton, Washington, lost his house in a fire that occurred on the twelfth, in zero weather, the only thing that was saved being the films that were being used. President Spanuth of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has returned from Algonquin, Ill., where he has been supervising the filming of the first of the Billy Whisker series. Mr. Spanuth reports they shot about 3,000 feet of fine snow scenes with Billy Whiskers as the hero. Billy is some goat, is Mr. Spanuth's verdict after working with him for a week and is sure to make a hit with picture fans. Commonwealth expects to start in on a new policy shortly, of buying state right features for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin and already is negotiating for two pictures.

President Schindler, of the Mickey Film Company, has completed retitling and cutting of "The Woman He Chose," a screen adaptation of the novel by the eminent Swedish author, Dr. Selma Lagerlof, the only woman awarded the Nobel Prize in literature and gave a private view of the completed picture last week. It is the opinion of those who saw the drama that the Swedish Biograph Company, which photographed it in the land of the midnight sun, had produced a masterful human interest story, dealing with the people of the north country. The action is coherent and the play is life as it comes to us through the medium of an artist. Mr. Schindler expects to put this production on the state rights market at an early date.

A few weeks ago the Chicago office of Select reported setting a new mark in booking records and this week they have gone one better, breaking all previous records by 27%. Manager Beadell is very proud of this achievement as comparatively few pictures have been released, the average being about one a month since last July. His staff did more business with one picture released in December, 1919, than with three released during the previous December. Good pictures, a real sales force and service were the factors in making this record possible, according to Mr. Beadell.

W. H. Aiken, an American representative, reports booking "The Hellion" for the fourteen Iowa theatres of the Adams Circuit for February showing. "Six Feet Four" ran during Christmas week in the same string of theatres. Mr. Aiken says he does business with Mrs. J. W. Adams, who, in this case, is "the man to see."

While Mr. Adams is scouting up rundown theatres, buying up "lemons," his wife is on the job at their headquarters, transforming them into active money-makers. A year ago there were three Adams theatres. Today they operate fourteen and expect soon to own a lot more.

The Idle Hour theatre of Grand Rapids, Mich., is running American Film Company features exclusively from January 4 to February 16. Florida as a Producing Site

Klutho Studios Issue Statement That Indicates Advantages to Be Secured

THE Klutho Studios, located in Jacksonville, Fla., claims that the Jacksonville district offers one of the best sites for picture production purposes that can be found in the States. Owing to the fact that the Klutho studios have been erected only a few years ago, it is said that the facilities for production offered by this plant and the character of the surrounding country are not widely known among the producing forces.

The suggestion is contained in the recent communication from the Klutho organization that this section of the country would offer an excellent location to relieve the congestion at other Eastern points, due to the return of so many companies from the West coast at this time of the year. In describing the advantages to be found in the area of the Klutho plant at Jacksonville, the following statement has been received from H. J. Klutho:

"It is the terminus of all the trunk lines that enter Florida, and can be reached within twenty-eight hours from New York by some of the finest trains that operate. It has green foliage all the year round and is the largest city in the State. It has over one hundred thousand inhabitants and so is metropolitan in character. It has steamship docks and steamships sailing from New York three times a week.

"It is also nearest to mountain scenes in Georgia. Although Jacksonville is several hundred miles further south than Los Angeles, it is a remarkable fact that locations can be obtained with nothing but live oak trees in view, giving the effect of Northern scenery—whereas several thousand yards away a jungle scene can be photographed that would suggest the South Sea Islands.

"From the location standpoint Florida has not yet been scratched on the surface. The companies that have been South have barely gotten away from the railroad tracks and the smell of the locomotive smoke. One man only, and his name is Mr. Frederick Burlingham of the Burlingham-Paramount-Adventure Pictures, has penetrated somewhat into the interior of Florida and has been wonderfully rewarded for his trouble."

"Eve In Exile," newly put on the market, is now being shown in first-run houses the country over.

"The Valley of Tomorrow" is soon to be released. Mr. Nehls, who was on the job at Lake Tahoe during part of the time while the cameras were cranking away on some of Nature's choicest geography, is highly enthusiastic about the popularity prospects of this new super-feature.

A strong story, a strong cast, strong action and acting, make the success of "The Valley of Tomorrow" a foregone conclusion, according to Mr. Nehls. Stephen Fox was the author of the script, and Emmet J. Flynn directed the production, which is being released as a "Flying A" Special.

Work of razing five buildings at State and Lake streets, to make way for Balaban & Katz big loop theatre, started this week. That no time will be lost in the construction, caissoned foundations will be started even before the present structures are wrecked entirely. It is estimated that the Capitol, which will be the name of the new house, will entail an expenditure of $4,000,000 and will be one of the finest theatres from an architectural and artistic standpoint, as well as in size, in existence. There will be no stores or offices in the building, but rest rooms for women, smoking rooms for men, children's playrooms a splendid promenade and foyer will be among the attractions of the theatre, which is being built to accommodate approximately 5,000 persons at a single performance.

The Aero Club of Illinois attended a private view of "The Great Air Robbery," featuring Lieut. Locklear, at the Universal Exchange this week. The Producer's Task Defin

SOME sound picture philosophy and timely suggestions are contained in a statement recently issued by King W. Vidor, producer of "The Turn in the Road," "Better Times," and "Poor Relations." The statement is reproduced in the following:

"What a man does in his leisure moments is as important to the community as a man's workaday hours are to his employer. Bolsheviks are not made during working hours because, during that time, man's mind is occupied. It is after hours, the leisure moments, that the insidious propagandist seizes upon to instill the mental serum which poisons humanity.

"The Motion Picture Producer, then, should awaken to a keen sense of duty, a responsibility which lies beyond the point of entertainment.

"The Producer's task, it must be admitted, is a difficult one; he cannot preach and he is not an instructor. But it is possible, however, to be noble without being melodramatic; to be sweet without being tiresome; to be romantic without being maudlin; to be serious without being sanctimoni solemn; to be a winged angel of thoughts without being shot f goose.

"It is through the medium of tion pictures that the working must be made to realize that th ployer's lot is not one of indolen in a palace of luxury. And it fo that the employer shall come t that the laborer is as worthy of sideration as he is of his hire.

"The evening hours are man's valuable for, paradoxically spe they are his leisure moments, t what makes them valuable. ' shall I do this evening?' This question which agitates millio minds every night, male and f alike. This question might be lated to mean 'What shall I about tonight?' It is up to the M Picture Producer to give to these minds a theme constructive as w instructive, while ostensibly ca merely to the entertainment o public."

"Michael and His Lost Angel" Is to Be Six-Part Production for Equity

HARRY GARSON, producer of the Equity pictures in which Clara Kimball Young stars, and under whose direction four Special productions a year are to be made, has decided to star Conway Tearle in the forthcoming special production which is being made from the noted fiction document "Michael and His Lost Angel," but which title will be changed for screen service to a shorter and more appropriate one with commercial value.

Conway Tearle has long been an attractive personality before film patrons, and because of his association with a number of feminine stars of the screen, has developed a personal following hardly second to any of the women stars with whom he has worked. Mr. Tearle, in addition to playing the principal male role in a great many legitimate productions in which he has been featured or co-featured, has bee opposite Clara Kimball Young in Common Law" several years ag later with Mary Pickford in ' Maris," then later with Miss again in "The Foolish Virgin."

Louis Mayer featured Mr. opposite Anita Stewart in "Mi Paint Girl," while Norma Tal has been seen opposite Mr. Te "The Way of a Woman," and Loves and Lies." In "The Vi Vamp," Constance Talmadge's fir ture through the First Nationa Tearle had the important mal and later he appeared in "The for Sale," "The Judgment Hous opposite Marion Davies in Folly." All this work has been tailed in with Mr. Tearle's work dramatic stage.

Indiana Capital Flows Into Picture Ventures

The rapid growth of the photoplay ndustry in the rapidly growing small nanufacturing center cities of north- rn Indiana was evidenced last week y the filing of articles of incorpora- n of the Marion Theatre Company f Marion with the Secretary of State t Indianapolis. MARTIN JOHNSON WRITES US FROM CANNIBAL-LAND

MARTIN JOHNSON, from his distant habitat in the New Hebrides, where he is preparing material for more releases through Robertson-Cole, has found time to address a few lines to the NEWS on the experiences he has met. Under a date line of Nov. 8, 1919, at Malekula, New Hebrides, he writes:

"After six months among the cannibals of Malekula, we are waiting for a ship to take us to Sydney with 25,000 feet of wonderful film. We found a race of monkey people, a race of dwarfs, a race of long-headed people, and we have filmed them all.

"We had been told that the village contained about one-hundred people, but on reaching it we found five-hundred warriors preparing to march on another tribe. Mrs. Johnson and myself were alone, excepting for five boys carrying my cameras—we thought our time had come, but they were intent on their own affairs and we hurried back to salt-water. In a few days we returned with our armed guard and found the people curing human heads that they had brought back."

"Snipe" Ads Struck at Source

Col. Fred Levy to Request Retail Clothiers to Deal Direct with Exhibitor

AN exhibitor protective measure, sweeping, drastic and radical beyond all precedent, aimed to destroy the producer-distributor practice of injecting "snipe" advertising into entertainment film, and which will ally with theatre owners approximately eleven thousand retail clothing dealers in their fight to stamp out the alleged trespass of screen rights, will be sought by Colonel Fred Levy, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Kentucky and Tennessee, in a resolution which he will present as president of the National Association of Retail Clothiers at the forthcoming convention of that body.

This action by the executive head of the largest organization of retailers in the United States undoubtedly will have a far reaching effect, both in its bearing on the future of the so-called "snipe" advertising, and in its moral effect upon the advertising profession as a whole. The National Association of Retail Clothiers, firmly intrenched with a membership that includes every clothing merchant of consequence in the country, is viewed by other associations of retailers in different lines, and by national advertisers and the legitimate paid-publicity fraternity, as an association of unusual strength and influence, and which, in its joint recommendations, commands serious consideration.

As president of this organization Colonel Levy will present a resolution to the convention calling upon the eleven thousand retail dealers to ask the clothing manufacturers of the United States not to go to the film producers and distributors to place clothing advertisements on the screen, but to go direct to the exhibitors and make mutually satisfactory arrangements with them for the showing of slides and films that advertise the various brands of wearing apparel.

This action, in the opinion of Colonel Levy, who is the head of Levy Brothers, of Louisville, Ky., and one of the largest retail clothing firms in the South, will strike directly to the heart of the situation, and have a reaction on national advertisers in other lines which will go a long way toward clarifying the problem for exhibitors, and which will awaken the advertisers to the reel methods by which producers and distributors have obtained circulation for semi-advertising films in the past.

Wayburn Withdraws from Capitol Theatre

An announcement, equivalent to forecasting enlarged and more ambitious activities for the new Capitol theatre, has come from Managing Director Edward Bowes of that institution. Ned Wayburn, who has staged the two revues that have been produced at the Capitol supplementing the motion picture and orchestral program, will withdraw as producing director because of his inability to devote the great amount of time essential to the frequent and elaborate changes of bill contemplated in the Capitol policy. Expert producers, who will devote their time exclusively to this purpose, will hereafter control the actual staging of the ever-changing and ambitious offerings at the Capitol.

At the same time it has become known that Messmore Kendall, president of the Moredall Realty Corporation, owners and operators of the Capitol theatre, has just purchased the two buildings 231 and 233 West 50th street, immediately adjoining the theatre, for scenic studios, rehearsal rooms, costume department and to house its mechanical staff. The purchase was made by Mr. Kendall personally.

National Board Lists "American" Subjects

A list of 224 motion pictures suitable for use in Americanization programs has been prepared by the National Board of Review. The National Board had foreseen the call for pictures of this type and when the Joint Committee on Education of the Senate and the House in Washington adopted the resolution last month requesting the motion picture industry "to do all in its power to upbuild and strengthen the spirit of Americanization within our people," the National Board regarded the time as ripe to put in available form the data it had been gathering. The result is this list of pictures drawn from the product of all companies: dramas dealing with American life and short pictures of travel in the United States and possessions as well as those showing American industries and accomplishment. This list may be obtained freely from the National Board of Review, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City, upon request accompanied merely by postage.

Insurance Policies Given Rothacker Workers

Workers at the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co.'s Chicago studio-laboratory started out the new year each with a brand new life insurance policy. The policies were presented by the company. It is a Rothacker custom of a number of years' standing to provide workers with annual life insurance, a policy increasing with each year of a worker's service.

In presenting the policies, President Watterson R. Rothacker expressed the hope that none of the workers would have occasion to use his policy during the year.

"Life insurance," said Mr. Rothacker, "is a fine thing—so long as you don't cash in on it."

The Reader Has His Say

Where an Advertisement Becomes Too Strong

Editor Motion Picture News,
New York.

What appears to me to be the most ridiculous advertisement I have ever read in your publication appears in your issue of January 10, 1920. I refer to what is supposed to be a copy of a telegram from the manager of a local theater to the General Manager of Realart Pictures, New York.

Until I read this advertisement in which this manager states when he ran a certain picture "everyone else is starving" (I suppose he means every other "theatre" but his own, surely he does not mean the whole population of Richmond), I would not believe there is a manager of a theatre in this city who would stand in the front of the house of a competitor to find out what his competitor is doing. But since reading this ad I must be mistaken, how, could a manager know the other houses were starving and in this case he must have had poor eyesight.

I can only speak for this house with which I am connected and will say I did not starve, in fact I enjoyed a very good Christmas dinner, made doubly enjoyable by the splendid business we did "during the worst week in amusement business."

I suppose this ad was inserted by the advertiser for the purpose of pulling business, but, Mr. Editor, are the exhibitors who read your valuable paper so lacking in intelligence as to swallow such statements and to be influenced to book a picture on the strength of such statements? I ask this question, but I know they are not.

We are happy to be able to contradict the statement that we were starving with all of the other houses. We do not know what the other houses were doing as we were too busy attending to our own business.

Declares Small Town Man Pays for "Key City" Runs

Editor Motion Picture News,
New York.

I have read with interest the various matters discussed in your paper from the exhibitor standpoint and the producer. The article written by Mr. Laemmle regarding the Key City bookings has broken the ice on one of the subjects which I have had some ideas of my own but not being on the inside could not make any definite statement, but when a man of the standing and reputation that Mr. Laemmle holds, speaks out, there must be a great deal of truth in his statement.

Starting almost two years ago but more noticeable the last year, there has been a definite drive in the salesman's attitude to always drive home the fact that such and such a picture was playing on Curtis Street in Denver—that is was cleaning up. They always tried to use that line of persuasion to make bookings. They carried the idea that the only brains in the exhibiting business was in the Key City.

The exchange would then follow up with a lot of stuff about this picture breaking all records and that if we did not show it we were behind the times. I have, like others; fallen for that line of bunk only to find out that either the great brain in Denver was wrong or our people. At first I gave Denver the benefit of the doubt, but on talking and investigating the subject with other exhibitors I found that in nearly every case they had the sad experience that I had.

We paid unreasonable rental on the strength of the "bull" put out by the exchange on the Key City showing. Later I took the stand that any of these so-called record breaking pictures would have to be sent here for showing. I wanted the picture to be the salesman and not the so-called brains in Denver. After a few of these requests and showings we learned that the salesman and exchange had greatly exaggerated the picture, that in many cases it was not much better than a program picture. To have booked it and advertised it as would have had to be done would have been overselling the public, and lose the faith of our patrons.

It has now developed that no exchanges will send us any of these so-called record breaking subjects for review because they know their line of bull far exceeds the value of their product. Their Key City showings may continue to fool the majority, but this territory has had its eye teeth cut on that subject. A Key City showing means nothing to us—rather we look on it with some concern of suspicion. Not all such Key City showings are so recognized, as a successful first showing without doubt helps the entire territory, but the point I wish to make clear is, that every time there is a Key City showing that subject (no matter what it is) breaks all records, and the exchange tries to inflate rentals on such propaganda.

I feel that these Key City showings do not cost the house any rental, that the exchange to get a showing and bunk the exhibitor plays the picture free of rental so they can sell it in the territory. I further contend that this system is used by one of the largest exhibiting circuits, that the franchise holder does not pay any rental on the film they use, but passes his share of rental to the exhibitors in that territory, that is why they ask and get such unreasonable rentals. Their plan was that every town was graded according to population, and they at times gave figures and even contracts for a certain picture only to cancel or withdraw contracts as they had found the picture to be a clean up, so they wanted more money.

That brings me to the subject of the 10 per cent. rental discussed in your paper. The majority of the Key City houses do not pay any film rental, so pass their share to the small exhibitor whose average without a doubt runs from 25 per cent. to better then 50 per cent. of the gross receipts. The big houses make their tax returns but there is no proportion of that amount made in rentals. I do not think Famous Players, Fox or any of the producers' houses pay film rental, but pass it to the small town exhibitor and then uses his Key City run as propaganda to sell his product. The few independent big town exhibitors are so under the control of the producers that what he wants to do and determines to do, is overcome by producers steam roller. Its about time the entire exhibiting end of the business throws off its blindfold and organizes so he will get a square deal. When he does organize, demands and gets a square deal, then a great deal of the strife, misunderstandings and general gyping attitude will be eliminated, and peace and harmony will prevail in this business.

Leo Peterson,

Oklahoma City

A BILL prohibiting the showing of moving picture films featuring the work of desperadoes, bandits, train robbers and other outlaws has just been introduced in Congress by Congressman J. W. Harreld of the Fifth District of Oklahoma. The proposed act provides penalties of $10,000 and five years' imprisonment for transporting from one state to another, or for the showing of a film depicting the life or conduct of any former convict, desperado, bandit or train robber.

Unable to agree on a new working contract, all members of the International Stage Hands and Moving Picture Operators' Union employed in moving picture theatres at Okmulgee, Okla., are on a strike and are picketing the theatres which are using non-union help. The strikers claim that the picketing has hurt the movie business in Okmulgee, while the theatre managers claim on the other hand that they have lost no business as a result of the strike.

The Orpheum theatre, one of the oldest and most widely known playhouses in the Southwest, was destroyed by fire at Mexico, Mo., morning of January 3. The aged father of Shirley Thompson, manager of the theatre, was trapped by the flames and perished before he could be rescued by the firemen.

Work will commence January 15 on a new $500,000 theatre, to be built at Oklahoma City, Okla., by J. H. Cooper of Wichita, Kansas. The new theatre will be named the Cooper and will seat more than 2,000 persons, and will be the most modern in the state.

Ohioans Indorse New First National Franchise Plans

exhibitor booking interests became famous more than a year ago when it was discovered that the plan enabled the First National first run account in Cleveland to book the Chaplin productions for week stands at a rental of $600, with return engagements rental free. This, it was revealed then, was the first run percentage equivalent of the total negative cost assessed by the national body to the Ohio franchise.

It is this method of mutualization which is an outstanding feature of the new distributing plan, and which virtually eliminates film rentals and rental speculations, translating them into terms of definite percentages that remain fixed and permanent, varying only according to the differences in negative valuations for attractions released by Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated.

"The plan has proven itself," says Mr. Mandelbaum. "Ohio exhibitors have demonstrated conclusively that the theatre branch of the industry takes on a remarkable degree of stability when the uncertainties of non-systematic distribution are removed, with all of their evil and dishonest and unfair practices. The Ohio exchange has not been conducted for profit. It has been operated to perform the mechanical functions of shipping, film cleaning, and the usual operations of an exchange, on a cost basis, fixed and permanent, and which gives our exhibitor members their special feature releases without excessive additions to the territorial negative cost. Each member has absolute protection in his own locality. He does not have to concern himself with possible opposition for First National attractions, because his sub-franchise protects him. And still, this proviso is eminently fair to the producers, whose productions First National buys in open competition with other purchasing agencies, thereby assuring the stars or producers of the full market value for their efforts, determined by competitive demand among distributors."

A Real Asset to the Booker

Here are extracts from a few of the recent letters from prominent Exchanges—from those who have just received the 1920 Calendar. Scores of such letters have been received. Pretty sure evidence that the Booker's Calendar is a "hit."

Exhibitors Service Bureau

“In Every Home Some One Always Want Photoplay News”

By W. F. DAGON

Photoplay Editor of the Ohio State Journal, Springfield, Ill.

THE third of a series of special articles by photoplay editors, which will teach that it pays the newspaper to publish such a section and which will educate exhibitors to cooperate with the newspapers, is written by W. F. Dagon, photoplay editor of the Ohio State Journal. Mr. Dagon is telling you facts. He knows wherein he speaks. He says that in every home someone wants photoplay news and that the paper which devotes a liberal portion of its space to motion pictures need not worry about its subscription list. And in these two statements is contained the very essence of what constitutes a successful paper. First publishing what people want which results in universal popularity. Read what he has to say.

THERE is no news in a daily newspaper that is read by a greater number of people in every home than the motion picture news. This not only applies to the homes of the moderately well-to-do, the middle class, but also in the homes of the wealthy, the so-called silk-stocking circulation. The big things on the first page are quickly scanned. The headlines are read, perhaps the most sensational of the stories will be gone through. But when the motion picture page is found, nothing is hurried over, for the news is too good to be digested hastily, and must have careful perusal. The youngest member of the family is keen to know when Charlie Chaplin's next comedy will be released, the young women want information on “Wally” Reid or Lew Cody, mother wants to know about Mary Pickford, and dad is anxious, very much so, to know what Bill Hart's new one is all about. So it is a foregone conclusion that the newspaper that gives its readers the kind of news that everyone in the household wants, is the newspaper that is going to have and hold the largest number of readers. The State Journal, of which I happen to be motion picture editor, always tries to give its readers plenty of motion picture news. Particularly on Sunday does it print a great deal of news regarding the stars, the new productions and events in film circles.

The State Journal has, always been on the lookout for the best motion picture features and never passes one up that has merit. The Charles Sarver stories on scenario writing, the Monte Katterjohn hints to photoplaywrights, the Kitty Gordon series and Theda Bara series are some articles which I know aroused a great deal of interest and caused people to read the paper that did not take it regularly.

Just now we are using a feature sent out by a New York reviewer which tells us the best four films of the week, with an expert opinion on many of the new pictures released for that period. State Journal readers never overlook this feature, and it is a known fact that many of them cut the articles out and save them until the time comes when the pictures will be show here.

In these days of print paper shortage and high cost of white paper, a newspaper has to be conservative. But no paper should cut down on the amount of motion picture news. Take any newspaper and you will find space devoted to things which are not interesting to many readers. The paper has to have them because some people want them. But in every home there is someone who wants motion picture news, and for that reason the paper should see that its readers get it.

Springfield is not a great way from St. Louis A great many St. Louis papers are sold here every day, and hundreds are sold on Sunday. One of the St. Louis papers, The Globe-Democrat, has a wonderful motion picture section. Sometimes as many as three pages are devoted to motion picture news. One of the most convincing pieces of evidence as to the popularity of the films and film stars was the giving over on one day by this paper to two full pages—16 columns—of photographs in its beautiful Artgravure section to the stars of the Stage Women's War Relief Fund Pictures. Yet it is not so long ago that this same paper scarcely printed any motion picture news, but gave up nearly all the space to the legitimate attractions. The Globe-Democrat has seen the way the wind is blowing, and knows there are dozens of people interested in motion pictures to one who wants knowledge of the stage players or plays.

Getting back to the St. Louis situation again, I want to compliment the man, or men, of the Universal Film Company down there for their efforts in getting motion picture news and pictures of motion picture stars into the papers. Scarcely a Sunday passes that Carl Laemmle's favorites are not found conspicuously displayed and beautifully written up by this genius or geniuses. As the St. Louis papers are read by people all over Central Illinois it makes it very easy for this company to book its pictures in this territory. Indeed, managers have requests from patrons asking that they book some star or picture that has been nicely called to their attention in the newspaper. The motion picture section which the St. Louis Globe Democrat gets out has resulted in a goodly share towards increasing the circulation of the paper until it now outranks any publication west of the Mississippi river.

The newspaper is the logical place for motion picture news. Of course the magazines are very fine too, but they come out only once a month. There is enough happening in motion picture circles every day to furnish a column of very choice reading. Hot air press notices are not meant, but good, clean legitimate news, actual happenings and things that are interesting. And the paper that prints such news has not much to worry about in the matter of circulation.

It is only a short while back that every publisher looked at a piece of motion picture news as a bit of free advertising for the theatre showing the star or the play mentioned. It did not strike him that perhaps there were many thousands waiting to read that article in his paper and silently compliment him for publishing it. It was just what they wanted. If the same amount of space was devoted to motion picture news that is devoted by newspapers to editorials, that page would be more thoroughly read in many instances.

Perhaps one of the best examples of how eagerly real motion picture news is read is to sit in a theatre and listen to the comments of the patrons. You will hear many remarks about this or that star, or this or that production, news that probably been printed in the paper that day. has happened so many times as to become c monplace.

In Springfield recently we inaugurated on State Journal a “Midnight Man” stunt, along same lines as the old Raffles idea. A good-s sum in gold was given to the person who c catch “The Midnight Man.” The proposition given no especial attention, but after the first d news the entire town knew there was somet unusual on. By the fourth day, the day “Midnight Man” was captured, it is safe bet every man, woman and child that read The S Journal knew of the “Midnight Man” and travels. Simply because it was the kind of that appealed to them, just the sort of stuff makes readers for a newspaper.

Newspapers know that the sporting pages read by men mostly, with only a few women i ested. But motion picture news pages are by women and men. Perhaps it would not mistake to say that two people read motion ture news to one who reads the sporting Pick up any newspaper and see how much sporting news is run than motion picture n You will not find an advertisement of any on the page by any of the people that the is about. On the motion picture page you find advertising—a great deal of it—but in cases the size of the news space is very The day is not so far distant when more s will be given the film industry, and the paper has “the best motion picture page in Amer will be the paper that will be imitated by the just as they now imitate the funny columns, cartoons, the stories and the styles of the big successful dailies.

Competition Is the Life of Tra Says Dowler

FRANK DOWLER, JR., general manager o Signal Amusement Company, believes com tion is the life of trade even if the trade is ent within one company. As a means of keepin advertising men on their tiptoes he has inaugu a policy of booking the picture at two or mo the theatres run by the Signal company, for si taneous runs and then allotting the same adv ing space to each theatre, with the idea of sta a competition among the ad-men to deter which one can turn out the best product.

He started the policy by booking Mary Pick in “The Hoodlum” for a week's run at th cazar theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn., and al the Strand in Knoxville, Tenn. He notified Rogers, advertising manager at the Alcazar an C. Drumbar at the Strand, that he wanted th spread themselves on a quarter page ad fo feature.

Two men used the head of Mary as Burke's as the outstanding feature of their ads on ground that it was a most unusual picture o star. Both used reading matter under the Drumbar using the “Fourteen Points,” the he discovers during the course of the picture Rogers using a snappy synopsis of the story.

The Tale of Some Exploitation "What Am"

How Arthur Abelson, Manager of the New Lyric, Minneapolis, Put Over "In Old Kentucky"

WITH 37,683 paid admissions and seven day's extra playing time marking the results of [illegible] exploitation campaign, the New Lyric heatre, Minneapolis, has just completed a bit of howmanship that stands out as one of the recent cord-breaking promotion efforts that merit the [illegible] of exhibitors

he campaign, conducted by Arthur Abelson, ager of the New Lyric Theatre, assisted by a udron of exploitation aces, stands out as a ite to Anita Stewart in her greatest production date, "In Old Kentucky."

he fact that "In Old Kentucky," as a stage ay. had its origin and introduction in Minnesota; at Charles T. Dazey, the author, was a cub reorter on the St. Paul Globe; that Jacob Litt, a atrical producer of St. Paul, financed the proon of the play; and that the Whangdoodle nd was recruited from the negro waiters of the ollet Hotel which still stands in Minneapolis, ved as the gist of an abundance of press matter at filled news columns of local papers.

his press exploitation, which publicity reprentatives cleverly compiled into copy for newsers, launched the campaign two weeks previous he first showing of the attraction.

o enumerate the promotion devices that are t conspicuous in this campaign:

The largest billboard ever posted in Minneapolis twenty-two sheets long and ten sheets high, able of reproducing the word matter in letters ght feet high, was used.

A negro jazz band paraded the streets in true nstrel show style, giving concerts in ragtime bere each performance.

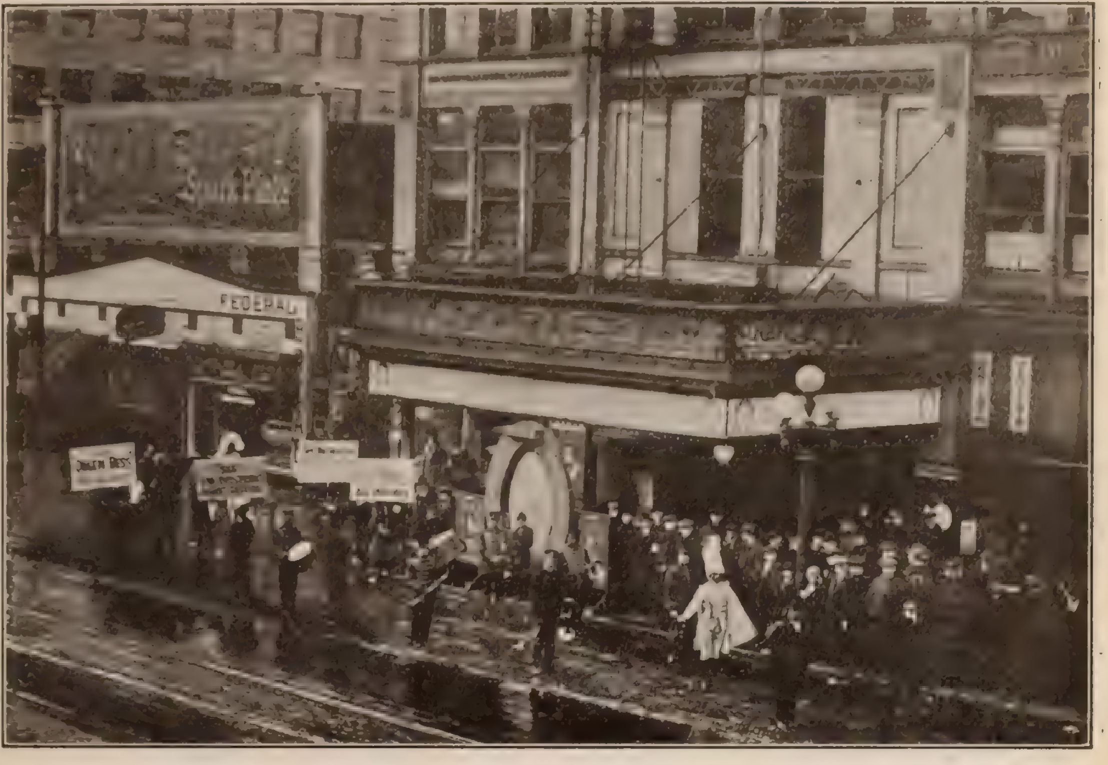
The same stage setting used in the legitimate ge production on August 5, 1892, served as the ing for the prologue which required the services ight negro musicians, instrumentalists and cers.

A lobby display featuring a horseshoe that stood ghteen feet high, from the sidewalk to the top the lobby canopy and cut-outs showing Miss ewart in many scenes were used.

Special boosting was given the song, "In Old ntucky," written for this picture.

Tie-ups with local confectioners resulted in the Kentucky Mint Julep" on every menu.

A street parade headed by a negro brass band, followed by the horse, Queen Bess, and nightriders was a semi-daily feature during the run of the attraction.



This is the band which the New Lyric engaged to help exploit "In Old Kentucky" at Minneapolis

Advertising accessories to the extent of 10,000 one-sheet cards, 2,000 "snipes," 10,000 circus heralds, 1,000 one-sheet lithos, and fifty 24-sheet stands were used.

The eight foregoing exploitation aids represented the outstanding devices which the New Lyric adopted to put the attraction over. Perhaps the most effective bit of promotion was gained by the mailing of 80,000 post-cards carrying the announcement of the attraction to each of the subscribers of the Tri-State Telephone Company. This involved an expense of more than a cent for each piece of mail matter sent out. It was the opinion of the management that with the other apparent preferment this card in the form of a personal solicitation would more than justify the expenditure by reason of the fact that it would be just the required touch needed to sell the 39-cent ticket.

Another inexpensive method that it is estimated brought the title of "In Old Kentucky," and the name of Anita Stewart before 10,000 theatregoers, and which can be adopted by those theatres affiliated with local vaudeville houses, consisted of asking a "seeress" what would be the next attraction at the new Lyric. At every performance she replied, "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart.

The week preceding the opening of "In Old Kentucky," a local vocalist sang the song "In Old Kentucky," from a box at the New Lyric at every performance. In addition to this popularizing of the title, several local cafes put the number on their program and the 5-10 cent stores willingly obliged with window displays.

The very presentation of the offering stimulated a word-of-mouth advertising that took precedence over any theatrical novelty seen in Minneapolis in years. The local coloring was given to the stage set which pictured darkies' cabin set in the foreground of a Colonial mansion, by the eight negroes who sang Southern melodies to the accompaniment of banjo, guitar and mandolin. A horse occasionally could be seen stabled in one corner of the stage and the cackle of love chickens supplied an obligato to the musical numbers.

In that part of the film where the horse race is shown the negro actors were again called upon to lend color to the scene. In the tense excitement while Queen Bess is neck and neck with the rival pony the cheers and appeals for victory rang out from behind the stage. The audience thrilled to this novel touch and in every instance broke out with cheers and applause.

The prologue preceding "In Old Kentucky," which, incidentally, was the only picture shown, lasted for ten minutes and served to get the audience in a most receptive mood for the peer of all stories of the southland.

Speaking about his exploitation, Mr. Abelson said:

"Our campaign demonstrated that 'In Old Kentucky,' with proper exploitation, is the greatest money-getter ever offered to exhibitors. It must be considered that whatever results from our own efforts in promotion, we have the benefit of twenty-seven years of cumulative advertising.

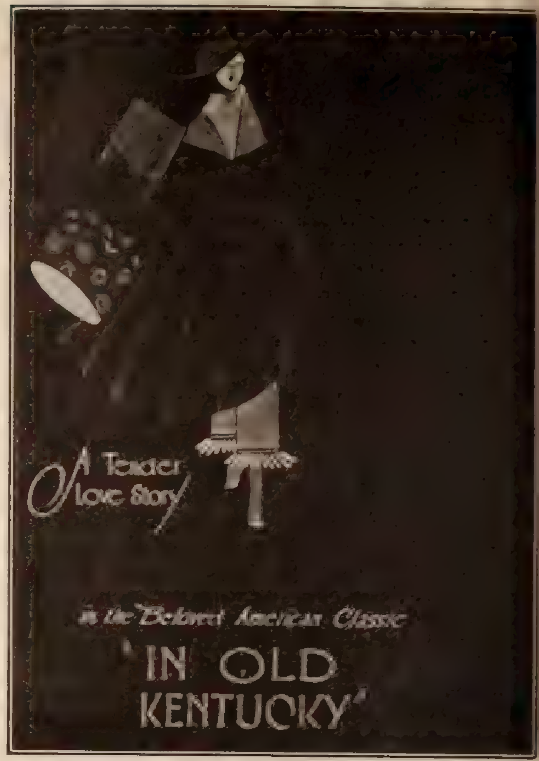
"Some of our best pictures were given unlimited runs. We charged an admission price of 55 cents. Yet, 'In Old Kentucky' at a reduced price of eleven cents per seat brought more money to our box office than any attraction we ever played. And the profit was greater despite the cost to which we were put in arranging for the negro band and our special setting.

"To handle the crowds we were forced to install another box office and add seven ushers to our regular staff. Despite a police guard to prevent shoving, our lobby doors and the interior decorations of the lobby were broken."

Extra newspaper space was gained when the New Lyric gave a complimentary performance to newsboys. Through the courtesy of the Liberty Taxicab Company, the youngsters were brought to and taken from the show in high style. This stunt alone resulted in a front page story for "In Old Kentucky" in every Minneapolis newspaper.

An extra midnight performance on New Year's Eve almost caused a riot when it was found that the entire house had been sold out two hours before the show was to start. The suspension of the sale of tickets for the evening resulted in a high feeling. However this took the nature of requests for an additional week's engagement.

"I would advise other exhibitors to pay special attention to the stage and film version of this production," said Mr. Abelson. "Usually the manager of a legitimate theatre is good for a story on how the original stage show was presented. This gives a good introduction to any exploitation campaign. With proper care to exploitation the picture looks to me like it will break records anywhere."



This poster was designed especially for the New Lyric engagement

Good Idea for "Eyes of Youth"

AN effective and inexpensive exploitation stunt for use in advertising "Eyes of Youth" is reported from Louisville, Ky., where the Strand theatre pulled the stunt with excellent results.

The idea of itself is not new, several instances having been recorded in these pages where managers have employd it, but the Strand has utilized it a little differently.

The Strand stunt was the placing in automobiles of a white card purporting to be a notice from the police department telling the driver of the car that he was violating traffic rules. On the lower side of the card is printed "You are summoned" with an "over" just below it. The card on the other side was printed with an announcement of the "Eyes of Youth," showing at the Strand.

MacKenzie, Scotchman Who Uses His Head

With a 24 Sheet and Brains This Exhibitor Evolves a Window Display Which Broadway Can't Beat

DOWN at Atlanta, Missouri not Georgia, there lives an exhibitor by the first class old Scotch name of J. Greene MacKenzie who some way we have a hunch is wasting his talents on his home town which according to the newspaper census numbers some 600 souls. When a showman in a village of this size has the energy to originate novelty advertising of the quality we are going to tell you about and then possesses the mechanical ingenuity to carry out his ideas, it would seem as if a larger sphere for his activities should be forthcoming. All of which is a statement not proven until we tell you about some of the stunts Mr. MacKenzie has pulled.

Nearly everyone no doubt has seen the marionette figures which some patent medicine and other druggist sundries firms sometimes use in advertising their wares but it remains for Mr. MacKenzie to be the first exhibitor we have ever heard of who put this idea to practical use in advertising a photoplay.

As an instance of what Mr. MacKenzie is doing along this line we will describe a window display he originated and built including all mechanical apparatus for "Kathleen Mavourneen."

He secured a window in an Atlanta drug store, perhaps we might say THE Atlanta drug store and proceeded to originate a display for the Theda Bara picture which may well be the envy of any showman who appreciates the value of novelty advertising.

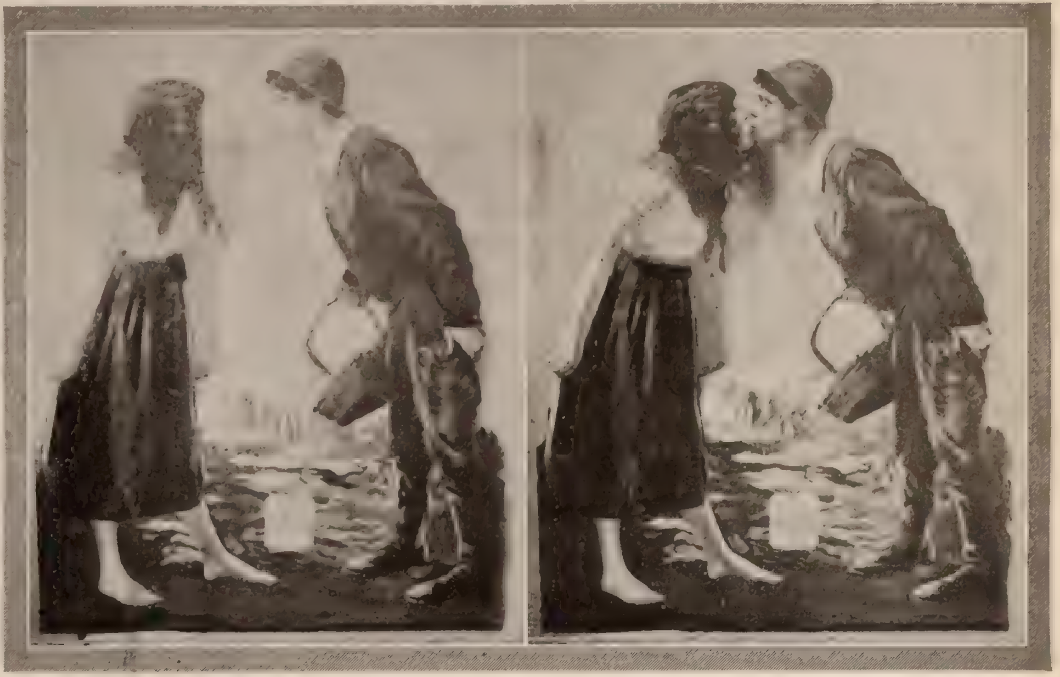
Mr. MacKenzie used a lithograph from the producers for the basis of his display. Beginning with the whole stand he cut close to the feet of the two principal characters Theda Bara and her Irish lover in the picture and then at the right and left of the figures he cut perpendicularly to the figures themselves when he clipped close to the forms until he had cut-outs of Miss Bara and her lover from the limbs up. This done, the cut out was pasted on beaver board toned to the same outline as the lithograph.

Mr. MacKenzie's next move was to make the figures animated. By placing a pivot hinge at the waist of each figure and arranging levers on the back side of his invention he had animated automatons which would bend forward to complete the kiss suggested in the lithograph as it was in the original. When the inventive showman had all his levers and cams arranged so that they would gyrate between the two positions as is shown in the accompanying cuts, a small electric motor was pressed into service to furnish the mechanical power and the window display was all ready to start work for the showing of "Kathleen Mavourneen" at "The Picture House" which is the name of Mr. MacKenzie's theatre.

So nicely timed was the mechanical part of the arrangement that just before the "lips" touched there was a hesitation of a fraction of a second before the osculation act was completed.

Mr. MacKenzie has been specializing in this sort of advertising for some time. When he played "Daddy Long Legs" he arranged a similar display so far as mechanical effects were concerned. This cut out showed "Mary" fishing in a gold fish bowl with practical rod and line the "fish" being the tiny figure of a man who, "nibbled" and then was "hooked."

There is a moral to this story as well as a lesson in mechanical ingenuity. If a showman in a town of less than 600 souls finds it pays to go to such extraordinary pains to advertise with novelties, what value should accrue to the theatre in a city where competition is keen and where there is an unlimited field from which to draw? The answer is that the city showman if he put the brains and "pep" into his exhibiting career as does Mr. MacKenzie, in six months he would have to enlarge the seating capacity of his theatre.



Mr. Brown's mechanical window display in two positions. "Before and after kissing"

What a Real Idea is Worth to a Real Showman

JUST how much an "idea" is worth when a live exhibitor gets hold of it, no matter where and when originated, is demonstrated in the experience of manager Eph. Rosen of the New Unique theatre, Minneapolis, one of the Finkelstein and Rueben houses, when "The Thirteenth Chair" was being played at the New Unique.

Mr. Rosen looked the picture over for advertising possibilities and among those he found which he thought ought to waken public interest was the spiritualistic theme on which the whole plot is founded.

So the New Unique advertising carried the announcement that during the "Thirteenth Chair" engagement a full fledged honest to God spiritualistic medium would appear at every performance and answer questions asked by any person in the audience and also demonstrate other evidences of his occult powers.

Uro Nye was the title of the medium engaged for the showing. The "professor" has a good reputation for getting away with his demonstrations in Minneapolis and also received a good share of the New Unique's advertising space. The result was that nine out of ten women and a surprising number of men living in the twin cities soon became convinced that they must see this man perform, whether or not they cared about seeing the picture.

In view of the fact that the New Unique was up against the keenest of competition for the full week, Manager Rosen is proud of his record with the picture.

Good big newspaper space was purchased all of which played up the mystery part of the picture and dwelt on the spiritualistic elements.

Large posters with stills from the productions were placed about the lobby and on these were catch lines about the medium and her power to tell events as does the medium in the picture.

Directly in front of the theatre, on the sidewalk, was placed a huge chair, about 15 feet high. This was labeled "The Thirteenth Chair" and was a veritable magnet for drawing the people.

"The Miracle Man" Plays Three Weeks at Seattle

THE Strand Theatre of Seattle has just completed a three-weeks' engagement of "The Miracle Man" that was characterized by an unusual exploitation campaign which resulted in a steady consistent patronage confirming the policy of the Strand management in booking the feature for so extended a showing and then inaugurating a publicity campaign which would keep business up to the required standard.

The Strand advertising was largely along conventional lines, special stress being laid on the merit of the picture in the large newspaper displays carried throughout the showing. From the accompanying cut, the reader may view one of the characteristic audiences which the picture drew. The photograph was taken during the second week of the showing when it was expected that business would drop off. The camera man was invited around so the News might have visual proof that it didn't.

Jackson, Mich., Newspaper and Exhibitor Co-Operate

THE general campaign consisted of a Madge Kennedy contest conducted through the Jackson News, window displays in the local shops, full page tie-up advertising on Sunday, distribution of unique advertising matter on the streets, greatly increased newspaper advertising, and a special co-operative newspaper campaign on "Flame of the Desert."

Supported by the fact that the new Farrar picture was being brought to Jackson for its first public showing, Mr. McLaren visited the publisher of the Jackson News and enlisted his interest. The picture was presented privately to the newspaper officials before the advertising proposition was suggested. The result was a special showing of the production, sponsored by the Jackson News at noon of the opening day. News readers were invited to the performance free of charge providing they carried the coupon published in the paper.

Franklin of Buffalo "Builds In" the Yuletide Atmosphere Until It "Bubbles"

NO holiday during the year ever goes by without special recognition by Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, but it is at Yuletide that he plans to put his best into converting his big house into a veritable Santa Claus land, and this year proved no exception, for the Hippodrome bubbled over with Christmas "atmosphere."

Patrons expect unusual things at this house, so in a way they were not unduly shocked when on entering the lobby the first thing that loomed up in front of them was a mammoth Christmas tree, beautifully decorated and electrically lighted, that was placed at the bottom of the escalator in the front of the lobby. As the eye passed down the long corridor leading to the theatre proper it met with pleasingly placed holly wreaths and long strings of Xmas greens, entwined with vari-colored incandescent bulbs, the whole taking one at once into the land of make believe where old Kris Kringle and his cohorts thrive.

The interior of the big house was also attractively decorated, but it was into the stage setting that Franklin put his real effort, with the result that Hippodrome patrons saw one of the most elaborate as well as most attractive settings so far presented. The center setting showed a blue background into which was perforated Santa Claus and his reindeer train jumping off into space off the house tops of a quaint little village nestling in a snow-clad valley. Stars were also cut through the background, so that when spotlights were thrown on the canvas from the rear the whole was thrown into lifelike realism. To the right directly in front of this background was a large Christmas tree, also like the one in the lobby, strikingly decorated and lighted with many colored bulbs. To each side of the center setting were two fantastic scenes that harmonized well with the occasion. The orchestra pit was covered with greens and holly.

As the Christmas settings were unveiled, the big symphony orchestra played Romberg's "Toy Symphony," a composition that was especially appropriate to the season and which, excellently rendered, was enthusiastically received. Emmanuel List, of the Rialto theatre, New York, was the soloist, and his Christmas number was so well received that he responded with "Toyland," from "Babes in Toyland," by Victor Herbert.

The feature picture at the Hippodrome for the Christmas holidays was Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," which was also the debut of Realart pictures in Buffalo. The production proved a popular selection for the Yuletide season.

Tom Moore Entertains Leah Baird

LEAH BAIRD made a personal appearance at Tom Moore's Strand theatre, Washington, Jan. 9th, the occasion being the opening of "The Capitol" the picturization of Augustus Thomas' play of the same name in the capitol city.

Miss Baird was introduced by Mr. Moore in a neat little speech, responding with a witty talk about her adventures in Washington during the filming of the picture, incidents of which involving Miss Baird's running the gauntlet of fighting mobs during the race riots, were listened to with deep interest by those who had witnessed these disturbances.

"The Capitol" was received with unstinted approval by the audience, which applauded Miss Baird with enthusiastic delight. Souvenirs were distributed while Miss Baird was speaking and those who had not obtained photographs of the star during the showing received them later.

Miss Baird was given a supper at the New Willard Hotel at which were present many distinguished Washingtonians.

Stages Christmas Show for Kiddies

THE Strand theatre of Brooklyn, through its managing director, Edward L. Hyman, came in for considerable front page publicity in the Brooklyn Eagle the day following Christmas, when the newspaper described in detail the show for poor children given under the auspicies of the Eagle, at which 2,800 little shavers attended. It was quite some event in the childrens' and the Eagle and Strand employes and executives' lives who went home at night with a warm glow about their hearts in the feeling that they had brought happiness to so many who otherwise might have had cause to mourn Christmas Day.

Schade Wins in Higher Court

GEORGE J. SCHADE, owner and manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, who a year ago ran into trouble with the Sandusky authorities during the influenza epidemic, has escaped judgement on a fine of $100, which a lower court inflicted by the decision of a higher tribunal which dismissed the findings in rulings that the affidavits on which the action was brought were defective and insufficient to justify punishment. Mr. Schade kept his theatre open after being ordered by the city health director to close and the fine mentioned administered.

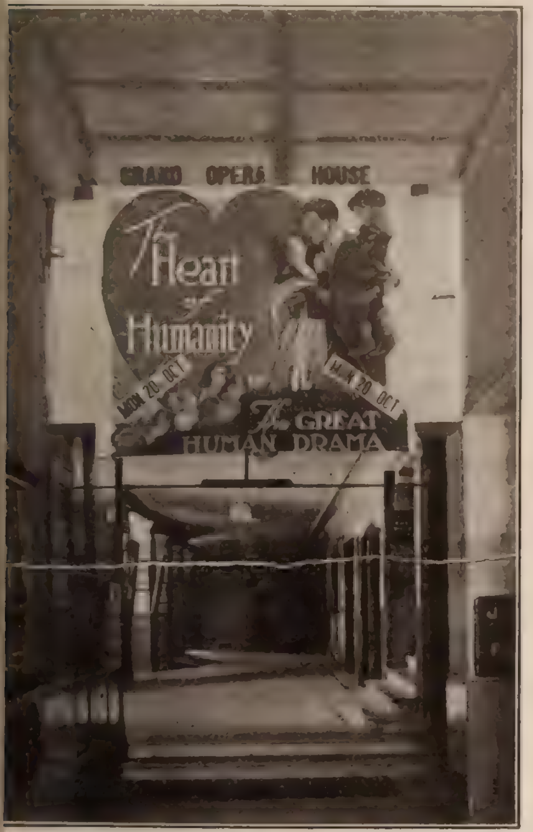
How the Pictures Are Exploited in India

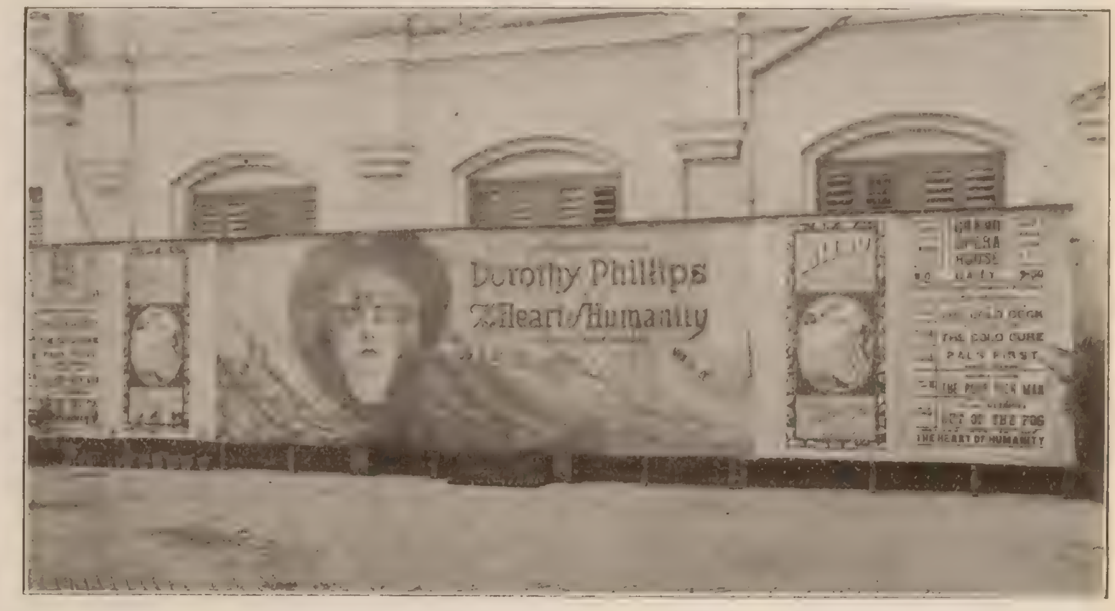
What the Grand Opera House, Calcutta's Largest Theatre, Is Doing with Illustrations

ILM exploitation in far off India offers a different problem than it does in this country. ompetition is not so keen there and the exbitor does not have to go to such great efforts to ring his film before the public. He knows any icture he shows will draw patronage.

He is in much the same position as the exhibitor as in this country many years ago when people id not go to see this or that star or a special icture, but just went to the "movies" much as ey would go into a table de hote restaurant.



ntrance to the Grand Opera House, Calcutta, ndia, rather marred in appearance by the lithograph over the lobby opening



A billboard stand which would do credit to some of our American houses which think they are the last word in knowing how to advertise a picture. The Grand Opera House bills its pictures "like a circus"

The far-sighted manager in foreign climes, however, is looking forward to the same boom in usiness that struck this country and made the film industry one of the greatest in the world.

Calcutta boasts of the largest cinema theatre in the east. This is the Grand Opera House, and has seating accommodations for over 1,200 persons. The house caters to the foreign trade as there are large British and American colonies there, and the higher castes of Hindustans are all conversant with the English language.

This theatre which is controlled by the Bijou, Ltd., could show mediocre pictures and in the American parlance, "get away with it." The patrons would content themselves with them because they would have no other alternative. It would be a case of take it or leave it.

The management, however, is far-sighted enough to look ahead and think of to-morrow. To guard against future competition they are booking only the very best pictures being produced. The leading stars whose pictures are in demand in this country are therefore also being screened simultaneously abroad.

In this Indian photoplay house we find an unusual problem nicely dealt with. Unlike motion picture theatres in this country, this house has an advance sale of seats. They therefore depend on their advance advertising to book a full house before the time for the showing of the feature.

Huge signs announcing coming productions are posted along the outside walls of the theatre which is on a busy thoroughfare. Plays are advertised in the papers and around the town well in advance of the showing.

If bookings do not seem to be coming in heavy enough extra efforts and more advertising are used to exploit the picture and increase sales or reservations. The success of this plan is forcibly shown by the fact that very rarely is there an empty seat at any performance.

The theatre is very up-to-date in design and appointments. It contains lounging rooms where refreshments are served. The management uses every bit af available space to draw the attention of its resting or strolling patrons to its coming productions. A unique method of cutting out the letters and figures of posters and pasting them directly on the tiled walls and pillars adds a good deal to the attractiveness and selling powers as well as neatness of the displays and helps immeasurably in hastening the incoming reservations for future performances.

New Slogan for Pre-Holiday Slack in Business Wins for Van Croix

A. E. VAN CROIX, owner of the Bijou theatre, Jamestown, N. Y., faced the usual pre-holiday slack with thought instead of resignation. He faced it with "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allen Dwan production, and a splendid campaign for exploiting the picture.

"Do your Christmas shopping early," said Mr. Van Croix to his home city, "but don't miss the best picture that's come to town this year!"

He told this to the Boy Scouts and to the American Legion, and to all the educational institutions of the city, and although unable to tie-up with the public and high schools because of iron-clad rules, he instituted a patriotic prize contest in the Jamestown Business College and made arrangements for showing the film to the whole student body at reduced rates for a group attendance of 200 or more students.

The day before the opening of his picture Mr. Van Croix gave a special showing of "Soldiers of Fortune" for all the Boy Scouts of the town and other invited guests. The special showing was linked up with a proposed drive for members which the Scouts had in view. Patriotic addresses featured the ceremony, the Boy Scouts went literally wild over the photoplay, and much enthusiasm was stirred up, the echo of which was heard in the Jamestown press.

Commander Peterson, of the local chapter of the American Legion, attended, and following the picture gave a written endorsement for such uses as Mr. Van Croix saw fit to make of it. This was used in a lobby display and was sent to local newspapers. Commander Peterson was also requested to announce to Legion members that upon presentation of their membership cards or Legion buttons they would be admitted to the theatre at half price.

Advertisements emphasizing the American character of the photoplay were featured in the newspapers and the fact that this is Richard Harding Davis' most famous and most thrilling novel was prominently played up. A special offer to Boy Scouts and accredited Legion members was likewise printed. On the main street of the city, enlarged stills from the adventure picture were attractively arranged with theatre notices in the shop windows for the benefit of the crowds of shoppers.

Although Mr. Van Croix had in mind an elaborate tie-up with the public schools in a prize essay contest, it developed that iron-clad rules prevented any connection for advertising purposes with the school system. Undaunted by this setback, Mr. Van Croix lined up the big Jamestown Business College with the contest and with special rates for large groups of students.

Mr. Van Croix is particularly enthusiastic about this idea, and suggests its use in conjunction with business colleges and other educational institutions. At the same time, as in the case of Jamestown, a special arrangement can be made for a slight reduction in prices if the students attend in sufficiently large numbers.

Mr. Van Croix's offer of a prize was made in the following letter to the principal of the Jamestown Business College:

"Dear Sir:

"Confirming our conversation of this morning, I beg to state that I will be glad to offer the following prizes to the students of Jamestown Business College: First—Five dollars; Second—Three dollars; Third—Two dollars.

"These prizes are offered to your students for the three best essays on the subject: What 'Soldiers of Fortune' have done in the development and growth of the United States.

"These essays are to be turned in not later than Wednesday, December 10th, and prizes will be awarded by you on Thursday, December 11th.

"May I point out that the students in their compositions need not necessarily use the book by Richard Harding Davis nor the photoplay which will be at the Bijou theatre as a basis. It would be better if they were to take the viewpoint that Christopher Columbus, Daniel Boone and all other pioneers were 'Soldiers of Fortune.'

"If on Monday or Tuesday afternoon the members of the Jamestown Business College would like to attend the performance of 'Soldiers of Fortune' in a body of at least 200, I will be glad to make a reduction of 50 per cent. in the admission price.

"Very truly yours,
"A. E. VAN CROIX."

An Unusual Occurrence in Phot play History

THE Alhambra and Lubin theatres of Cinci nati located side by side as may be seen viewing the accompanying cut recently adopted "Flying A" week; the Alhambra using "T Hellion" and the Lubin playing "Six Feet Fou Cut-outs from the 24 sheet posters of the "Hellio and the figure of Margarita Fisher as the que of the cabaret, were used to great advantage the impressive lobby displays. A large cut-out William Russell and the "Six Feet Four" mea uring rod, also had a prominent part in decorations.

The Lubin also used a special banner annou ing the title of the picture and was generous its display of scene stils.

Some interesting figures were obtained by respective theatre managements from the showi of two films from the same company by the t theatres situated along side of each other. In way it demonstrated the relative drawing val of each star and also brought to view some inte esting sidelights as to the value of titles in coa ing people into the theatre.

New to Us and Worth Remen bering

PHIL. GERSDORF, publicity director for S. A. Lynch enterprises for Jacksonvil Florida, has originated a new one, so far as o memory of exploitation goes. While Mr. Gersd used his cards for Christmas Day any legal holid will answer as well and there can be no questi of the advertising value of the idea.

Mr. Gersdorf's stunt is best told in his o words, which we received in reply to an inqu made of him following a tip which came into office that he had pulled an unusually clever adv tising idea:

"I recently put over a small publicity stunt th paid exceedingly well both in publicity for theatre and advertising on the current feature. had several hundred cards printed in Christ colors and with neat Christmas border bearing inscription "CLOSED Christmas Day—going see 'IN OLD KENTUCKY' with ANI STEWART at the ARCADE Theatre" and h them perforated with holes through which co be strung a piece of string of appropriate leng if needed. Had a number of these distribu among some of the smaller stores several d before Christmas, as the merchants were pleas to have a "Closed" card furnished them, and a thought well of the little idea. But of course would be out of the question and a great waste time to get to the proper authorities of the lar stores and have them place one of the cards in window as the smaller stores were doing, so ea Christmas morning we were on the job and one of these cards strung on the front door every place of business that we were not s would be open. By this method it was possible secure an ad in locations on the best sites in city that could not be bought under ordinary cumstances for love or money. The cards m quite a flash, and I have no doubt that they cau the eyes of nearly everyone of the many people the streets Christmas day. I even noticed that a few of the stores, where evidently the proprie had come down Christmas morning, but had opened for business, the cards had been taken fr the outside of the door and placed in a more c spicuous position on the inside."

Thomas D. Soriero Gets the Attention of the Whole City of Lowell With His Boot and Shoe Exhibit at the Strand Theatre

A particularly engaging novelty was presented at Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., under the di- ction of General Manager Thomas D. Soriero, in e nature of a shoe exhibit which attracted nsiderable attention from New England theatrical en. The exhibit, which was secured by Mr. riero through the courtesy of the United Shoe achinery Corporation and included a lobby dis- ay of fashionable shoes by well-known Lowell erchants, comprised a display of footwear om the Dark Ages to the present day. The auty of the exhibit was enhanced by the skilful e of artistically decorated glass show-cases in e large marble foyer of this handsome Lowell eatre.

For two weeks the Strand patrons crowded the bby to view some of the most interesting shoes er placed on exhibition, and in conjunction with anager Soriero's well selected program of films, ade a distinct impression on his patronage.

During the second week of the exhibition, a film owing the intricacies of modern shoe manufac- re was shown in the theatre in conjunction with e exhibit in the lobby. The motion picture took e audience through the various stages of shoe orkmanship, beginning with the tanning of the rious grades of leather to the finished product. his film was made at great expense under the pervision of the United Shoe Machinery Corpor- ion, using machinery made by this great organiza- on, which controls more patents on shoe manu- cturing machinery than any other corporation in e world today.

The shoe display, which was only secured by anager Soriero after many spirited bids on the art of brother managers, was approved by the owell Board of Trade. In this connection they nphasized their appreciation of the gigantic in- uence that moving pictures and moving picture eatres have on business, and what an association f motion pictures with industry can achieve for th.

When "Soldiers of Fortune" played Denver the American theatre exploitation men tied-up the engagement with the Christmas sale of Red Cross stamps which Denver ladies were then pushing. The results were highly gratifying to all concerned

The footwear was arranged in glass cabinets ith cards side of each exhibit giving the public a detailed history of each. There was shown, for instance, a Jack boot of King Henry IV of France, a heavy all-leather-and-iron affair which easily must have weighed fifty pounds. Another interesting boot was that worn by Marshall Ney at the battle of Waterloo. A slipper of Empress Elizabeth, Queen of Hungary (1894) was an attractive exhibit. The famous dancer, Clio de Merode of Austria, autographed a silken slipper for an admirer, and this is included in the display shown at the Strand. All the footwear displayed and the history claimed for each has been accurately established. Among other footwear shown was a handmade shoe, a heavy, bulky wood-and-leather affair, worn by Christian Bohsen for nine years. Bohsen was a Swiss guide in the Alps. Shoes of the Bishop of Klosterneuberg of Austria from 1750 to 1790 caused considerable comment. A bedroom slipper of Queen Elizabeth of Austria (1898) was a dainty affair. Shoes worn by soldiers of nearly every nation, kingdom and empire in the world were shown. Brogues and shoes worn by the allied soldiers, including our own doughboy's, were shown. The contrast was, if not amusing, at least interesting. Even straw shoes made from native grown grass and worn by the inhabitants of the Canary Islands could be seen. Dainty little shoes of Japanese and Chinese women were included, not to mention the footwear worn in the harems of Turkey.

General Manager Soriero, upon securing the exhibit, and wishing to co-operate and aid the shoe merchants of Lowell, gave them permission to exhibit the very latest models in women's, men's and children's shoes in the lobby, alongside of the ancient shoes, the contrast adding a conspicuous element of novelty and interest to the whole. The modern shoes were tastefully arranged in glass cases also, and in many instances included exhibitions of the latest patterns and designs in women's silk hosiery. Everything conceivable in the line of footwear was placed on display. Shoe men from all over New England came to view the exhibit, which they pronounced one of the most successful ever held in conjunction with a theatre. Incidentally the footwear exhibit was the same as that held so successfully in Boston.

In addition to a great number of specimens of footwear formerly the property of famous people some of which have been enumerated, shoes from Mexico, England, China, Japan, Vienna, Russia; soldier's footwear from Prussian Infantry, English Infantry, Serbian Infantry, French Cavalry, and Pershing trench shoe were exhibited.

The Press Book by the Men Who Use Them

A Series of Articles Secured by C. L. Yearsley, Director of Publicity and Advertising for the First National Exhibitor's Circuit.

THE producers press book, its merits and demerits, its value and shortcomings has been argued pro and con in the columns of the News for some time.

Much that is interesting reading has been printed, which so far as the News is concerned is highly gratifying. We aim to print that which our subscribers will read and we are not at all discomforted when some "start something." And something was started in the press book controversy. It is still going. The producers and publicity men of the producers who viewed with offended dignity the imputation that the product of their pens was "weak" have had their say. The other side has "told its tale." Now comes some articles which are really worth something to both producer and exhibitor.

They are to be written by the very men who use or at least would like to use press books in their every day job of furnishing publicity for motion picture theatres. We are going to print a series of such articles. The first is by Al. Levin, manager of the Coliseum theatre of San Francisco. The other is by Fred Warrington of the motion picture department of the Philadelphia Record. These men know what they are talking about. They don't argue, they just tell you facts. We hope what they say will strike home.

Fred Warrington, who is telling you some facts about press books in the accompanying story

BY AL LEVIN

Manager, Coliseum Theatre, San Francisco

FILM distributors send out too much matter. It is a waste for what is gained. I don't need reams of paper to blaze the way for successful advertising. I only adopt one or two anyway and three or four are sufficient for a live wire.

The great mistake of publicity departments is a lack of variety. They seem to work along the line that one good successful combination can be worked with a dozen pictures. That is not so, for the same colors, the same style and the same lettering means that people do not notice the change in attraction, and it is harder to bring it to their notice.

I can lay before you press sheets from a dozen concerns and in the collection can find for you many stories that follow identical lines, and in one book can locate several stories almost identical. That is not variety, it is camouflage.

Distributors may be able to stand the expense of reams of matter, but it is pure waste. Devotion to a small variety of real quality and less quantity would be better for exhibitors.

I have always believed that press books should be divided into two sections: One for the exhibitor, giving him his résumé of the story, timing of the film, music and some real dope on how the subject ranks, and the other for the best method in the judgment of the manufacturer of how to successfully exploit it. Pictures are not of uniform excellence and the producers know it. If they were honest about it and made an extra effort to aid an exhibitor in exploitation when the subject is below par, I believe it would have untold benefits in the long run.

Al Levin, manager of the Coloseum theatre, Portland

Posters and slides are my hobby. I believe I get more and better results from these two than any other publicity matter. I have used slides from the distributor, but they are cheaply arranged and I usually have my own made. Some one is being badly bunked, for I get better work for the same money even when duplicated.

In the last few months, producers have improved wonderfully in their poster work, and it is having its box office effect. I have noticed that all of my big successes where I used posters, had a solid coloring scheme until now I make my own, unless the colors are dignified. The motion picture has risen above the melodramatic, flamboyant appeal of other days. Our patronage doesn't need flaring posters to arouse its interest. Just the other day I had a chance to judge of colors when adjacent billboards carried the two extremes, one in rich and dignified solid background of blue and the other flaring with red. I noticed that people glanced at the vivid board and stopped to read and look at the more dignified board.

In a district house such as the Coliseum is, and with second-run pictures, I find heralds advantageous. But those created by the producers seldom do, as I adapt them to my patrons, and the only advantage of the ones secured at the exchanges is to help create ideas.

I use many photos in the course of a year and find that the ones furnished are excellent—for about two productions. The variety is so limited that except in advertisements utilizing scenes from a play they become useless. New poses I realize are hard to get consistently, but they are so important that I believe the producers would find it to their advantage to create a department for the sole purpose of introducing variety in photographs of stars. It is but a manifestation of the utilizing to death of a successful idea.

In looking over the field of publicity furnished, I think that the First National in the last few months have passed their competitors by leaps and bounds. So successful was their paper and exploitation material that whenever I booked a First National attraction that I immediately became anxious to see their advertising accessories, which formed a habit which in itself has proven a boon. It caused me to order advertising accessories simultaneously with the booking of my picture and the advantage of having it on hand has been so beneficial that I do it with all bookings and can plan some time ahead by advertising campaigns.

I never was very keen about booking Anita Stewart until the First National handled her productions. In my estimation she has been lifted from the slough of mediocrity by the publicity of the First National and the accessories put out for her productions have made her one of the biggest favorites that appear on our screen.

Their publicity spells dignity. The richness of their poster colors, the artistry of the make-up and the human interest angles that are embodied in the publicity stories are adding to the desirability of playing their offerings, until now I have no hesitation in booking a First National subject.

I might say practically the same of the Select service, but the rapid advance has not been so noticeable with that concern, although their prepared advertising and publicity is along the lines of dignity which I am trying to point out.

A great majority of film distributors try to impress upon the exhibitor the worth of their wares. That is all right in its place, but if one-half the effort were expended in trying to convey to the public the attractiveness of a given production that is expended in trying to convince the exhibitor, the box office receipts would stimulate the buying far greater than mere words can ever do.

BY FRED WARRINGTON

Motion Picture Department, Philadelphia Record

Thousands of dollars are wasted every year by motion picture producers and distributors in sending out press material that is of no interest to either the public or the newspapers, which is the medium through which the "fans" secure their news of current showings at their favorite theatres. This publicity matter comes into the newspaper office in large gobs and as a rule finds its way very quickly to the waste paper basket. There appears to be no thought given as to just what sort of matter the newspaper desires, or if the particular paper publishes advance motion picture news. In the first place the various concerns should ascertain just which of the papers publish such matter, and if they do publish it the particular kind of news they desire. Every paper as a rule has a different view of the kind of news that appeals to the public. The postage, let alone the vast sums spent in printing and typewriting, must run into the thousands each year. The ordinary stereotyped matter may be all right for use in the newspapers of the smaller cities, but it is of no use to the papers in larger cities, where it is essential that the publicity matter must have a certain news appeal to readers.

The average press sheets of today need careful revision, and some deep thought should be given to the kind of news that appeals to all kinds of

COLUMBIA'S BUSIEST THEATRE
BROKEN BLOSSOMS

The "Broken Blossoms" lobby display at the Rivoli theatre, Columbia, S. C.

Uses "Everywoman" with a Double Purpose

WO things actuated Charles Gross, manager of the Columbia theatre, Dayton, Ohio, recently when he decided to book "Everywoman" for a weeks run. First he wanted to make money and was sure that this picture would accomplish it.

Second, some of the picture houses of Dayton had been running pictures which had aroused the church interests and talk of Sunday closing laws and censorship were in the air.

So Gross had two incentives. He felt he had a big picture and he felt he could help the picture industry in Dayton by putting "Everywoman" over big. A tonic for the town, as 'twere.

He went to it!

His biggest stunt and one that they're still buzzing about in Dayton was the fourteen-page "Special Section" for "Everywoman" published by the Dayton Journal on Sunday. Securing the co-operation of Oscar A. Doob, the exploitation man from the Cincinnati exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Gross and the house press agent, W. K. Mathews, gave him every assistance—something a lot of exhibitors and house press agents don't always do.

It so happened that Mr. Gross is not on the most friendly terms with one of the two papers of Dayton. That left only two papers—the Journal and the Herald—for the exploitation man to do business with. Mr. Gross agreed to run a full page ad—something unusual in Dayton. Then he agreed to go further—he would have the ad in three colors! With that foundation, the Journal was induced to run a 14-page section. The title page—in colors—was designed by the Famous Players-Lasky representative and he followed the style of the Everywoman page ad in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines. Also followed the lettering style of the lithographs—so that the special section was tied up and bound tightly into the general advertising, although the section had the appearance of a regular magazine feature. Special matter referring to the photoplay was run throughout the section; illustrations from the stills were frequent: The Journal advertising department got busy and lined up a lot of tie-up advertising. A woman's apparel store advertised bargains for "Everywoman," an auto dealer had an electric car just for "Everywoman," etc., etc. There was a full page ad made from a special one-sheet lithograph prepared for window display tie-ups on "Hinds Honey and Almond Cream," a toilet article. The one sheet was photographed and a cut made, full page size. Four leading druggists, who handled the Hinds product, paid for the page, which was a wonderful smash for "Everywoman." This ad was a direct reflection of nearly a dozen window displays in drug stores. Other displays were secured in a stove store and music stores. Special cut outs were used effectively in both windows and stores.

The Herald helped along with an essay contest on "For Whom Does Everywoman Dress," resulting in a lot of publicity and interesting reading which held the attention of the women—to whom the entire appeal of the advertising was directed.

The opening of "Everywoman" at the Columbia had to be big with all this advance work. Mr. Gross booked the picture for a week and has decided to keep it eleven days at least. The Sunday opening was in a snowstorm and nasty weather. But at 11 a. m. Sunday the theatre was jammed and stayed that way until closing time. Monday was slushy and worse than Sunday. But the Monday was bigger than "The Miracle Man" or "Male and Female," record-breakers of a few weeks before.

Window Display for "High Speed"

E. J. DRUCKER, branch manager of the Hallmark exchange of Denver, has arranged a window display for "High Speed" with the Denver Dry Goods Company's store in exchange for the running of slides at the Denver theatres which are to run the picture, services in running slides announcing that the book by Clinton H. Stagg, from which the film production was made, may be purchased at the Denver Dry Goods Company's store.

The Denver mercantile has discovered a lot of value in tieing up with the film industry in cooperative displays and regularly practises this form of publicity. Nearly every good picture shown in Denver gets a window display along the lines we have recorded.

readers. There seems to be a lack of special stories concerning the screening of the picture, about the principals in the cast and the director, of whom there is always something to say concerning his career, or something he has done and his manner in directing the picture in question. This is the kind of material that is wanted by the daily and Sunday newspapers. Take Philadelphia, for instance, with its many large and spacious theatres. The publicity manager of these houses must send out his matter in advance of the showing, and frequently he must look to the press sheets for his material. If they have no interesting news such as is wanted by the papers for special stories, he gets very little publicity for the attractions. It is very seldom that any of the matter in the press sheets can be used in the manner in which it is written, and must be rewritten in an interesting way. There have been occasions that it occurs. I find that the Paramount-Artcraft press sheets are of the most use to the publicity man in securing his special stories for the Sunday newspapers.

Press sheets should be distinctive and gotten up in a manner that will not only appeal to the motion picture editors, but to the exhibitors as well. The press sheet gotten out by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit on "Daddy Long Legs" carried a combination of matter that practically suited the wants of the editors as well as the exhibitors, and could not very well be enlarged upon.

Many of the publicity departments of the producers dwell too much on the one subject, which results in the overlapping of the stories. They do not need to be long articles, for if they are short and to the point, there is more likelihood of their being published. It is far better to have a small item concerning an attraction published than having none at all.

"A vast amount of money and time can be saved if the producers will go more carefully into the wants of the newspapers."

Lester Says: "Spend Money on the Big Ones"

THE Rivoli, termed "Columbia's busiest theatre," is no busier than its manager, L. T. Lester, Jr., who is setting a pace for advertising and exploitation of pictures for Columbia, S. C., which few exhibitors in his city or others are able to maintain.

Mr. Lester plays the "big ones" and never hesitates in spending money to put an attraction over if the production warrants it.

During Mr. Lester's recent engagement of "Broken Blossoms" which extended over four days, Columbia was given every opportunity of learning that the Griffith picture was in town. One of the first things Mr. Lester did was to secure permission to fly a big banner announcing the engagement across the main street. This he did by getting two lines across from buildings high enough to stretch his banner above the trolley track and telephone wires. Next was the use of bill boards, vacant stores and other usual posting spaces for the hanging of lithographs which included everything down from the 24 sheet.

Then came his newspaper displays, a form of advertising which Mr. Lester greatly favors in his exploitation of pictures. Good displays both in size and quality were inserted in all the dailies.

This done the Rivoli lobby was attractively decorated. Vines and flowers were draped about the lobby display frames and carried throughout the theatre generally. The result of all this exploitation was a big audience at every performance, which further confirmed Mr. Lester's opinion that nothing is so important in the exhibiting profession as the publicity a feature receives beginning with the time it is booked and extending over the length of the run up to the time of the last performance.

Mr. Lester states that in his opinion the manager who is trying to run a theatre on the limited exploitation theory is soon to become an extinct specie for as he says, "You've got to tell people about your show if you expect them to come and see it. The more novel ways you can devise to do this the better you are off."

Mr. Lester who is also owner of the Rivoli has recently installed a $10,000 pipe organ in the house and also carries an orchestra of 12 pieces.

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

EXPLOITATION MEN'S MINUTE BOOK—"

GIVING Credit Where Credit Is Due. The text of the pages under this heading is devoted exclusively to the achievements of the Exchange Exploitation Men.

It places at the disposal of the exhibitor all the exploitation ideas these experts originate, renders their services practically universal and gives credit where credit is due.

Katherine MacDonald Contest Works Two Ways

AN exploitation idea which effects a close relationship between the theatre and the newspaper, with a proven ability to create an extreme measure of good will for the exhibitor sponsoring it locally, has just been concluded by the Photoplay Department of the Grand Rapids, Mich., Herald, with exceptional results for the management of the Majestic Gardens theatre, and returns in increased circulation for the Herald as its chief recommendation for exhibitors to make to newspapers in other cities and towns.

The plan in general is a Similarity Contest, so elastic that it can be related to any feminine or male star. In the instance of the Grand Rapids Herald the contest was conducted to determine the girl in the area in which the newspaper circulated who most closely resembles Katherine MacDonald, whose initial starring production, "The Thunderbolt," had been booked into the Majestic Gardens theatre in Grand Rapids to run during the last week of the exceptional exploitation fostered by the newspaper.

The decision of the judges awarded a first prize of $25 to Lucille Lumm, a Grand Rapids factory girl. Carl M. Saunders, Photoplay Editor of the Herald, the manager of the Majestic Gardens and Harold Heffernan, in charge of exploitation for the First National Exchange in Detroit, composed the board of judges which passed on several hundred applicants.

The contest was so arranged by Mr. Saunders that it gave the widest possible range of publicity value to the theatre, the star, her productions and the newspaper. The attempt to do something significant of circulation possibilities in motion pictures and that would prove conclusively the box office value of genuine newspaper publicity in behalf of a given star or attraction was made whole heartedly, and without any stinting on space.

Mr. Saunders announced the contest in a full page story in his department of the Sunday edition of the Herald. A series of prizes, including a first award of $25, a second prize of $15, and a third prize of $10, followed by minor awards of personally autographed photos of Miss MacDonald, were offered to the girls in western Michigan who most closely resembled Miss MacDonald.

No mention was made in this first announcement of the fact that "The Thunderbolt" had been booked to the Majestic Gardens. In fact, the Similarity Contest was first made public five weeks ahead of the established play date so that ample time would be allowed for the full value of the publicity to become effective on the public before it was sought to be capitalized at the box office.

Mr. Saunders pointed out to a local photographer the equivalent publicity value to him of offering to make pictures of all the entrants, which would be published in the Herald, with a credit line for the photographer. It was also suggested that the studio would develop several hundred new customers, each of whom would want several prints of the photos they had made for entry in the Similarity Contest.

This insured to the Herald a weekly supply for illustrations with a maximum local news value and interest, and it practically guaranteed the attention of every reader of the Herald to the conditions of the competition.

For five consecutive weeks the Photoplay Section of the Herald published stories about the contest, with photographs of the girls who had entered it.

Then, on the fifth Sunday a big display ad announced that Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt" would be presented at the Majestic Gardens for a week. There was excellent business judgment manifest in the selection of the play dates, inasmuch as the production was scheduled to run the last week of the contest, and before the decisions of the judges were announced. This insured an exceptional public interest until the outcome of the competition became known. The theatre was obliged to use the S. R. O. sign at every afternoon and evening performance throughout the week, according to Mr. Saunders. The demands made upon the Majestic Gardens by the public were so great that the Isis theatre, with an established reputation as a competing first-run house booked "The Thunderbolt" for a second run, violating its rule in this regard for the first time, and realizing a total of admissions as great as that of the Majestic Gardens.

"This contest has proven something of inestimable value to exhibitors and newspapermen," declared Mr. Saunders. "It has demonstrated thoroughly the latent circulation possibilities in motion pictures if the proper methods of realizing on them are applied. It has shown that theatres can utilize newspapers for publicity purposes to a degree undreamed of two or three years ago, if the system or idea employed to do it is at least half way practical from the newspaper's viewpoint.

An Object Lesson for Exchange Managers

AN exploitation idea which was born in Gloversville, N. Y., educated in Buffalo and should become famous over the country as an aid to putting over "Please Get Married" is herewith related.

Incidentially it is the first time we have been able to record an instance of where the exchange-man has proven that he is enough interested in the success of the pictures he books to his customers to individually attempt to extend practical aid in the way of exploitation. The fact that the idea originated with an exhibitor only adds to the praise we have for it.

First we will tell you of the stunt.

Meyer Shine, who manages the New Hippodrome theatre of Gloversville, played "Please Get Married" just before leap year 1920 came into being.

Following is the text of a hand bill he had printed and which was distributed over the entire city even to being passed directly into the hands of the workers of Gloversville's famed glove factories as the employees came out from their benches.

A New Year's Suggestion: If Single, Please Get Married.

There was nothing else on the hand-bill; nothing to indicate that "Please Get Married" was a feature motion picture production or when or where it was to be shown. This was done a number of days in advance of the showing. After curiosity had been started by this complete and broadcast campaign, Manager Shine clinched the loose ends of the publicity by his newspaper and billboard advertising.

Now comes the best part of our story since in what is related may be found an example of what every exchange manager should do when a similar incident occurs in his managing career.

The facts concerning Mr. Shine's herald was sent to the Buffalo manager of the Metro exchange, H. W. Kahn. Mr. Kahn thought it was good stuff as will any man who knows anything about publicity, but instead of immediately forgetting all about the matter after commending it in his own mind, he decided that he would pass the stunt along to those who had not as yet played "Please Get Married." He also injected a new angle into the idea, which is what we meant when we spoken of "education in Buffalo."

Mr. Kahn remembered that it was Leap Year, maybe he is a bachelor and saw that here was the chance of a life time to link up a picture with this once in four years event which never fails to get columns of space in every newspaper. So he wrote the customers in his territory about what Mr. Shine had done and suggested that they link the idea up with Leap Year.

He also dug back into his Ancient History school days and furnished some information on how Leap Year came into existence as a tradition.

Here is his letter on this subject as it went out to Buffalo territory exhibitors who are to play "Please Get Married."

"As you no doubt know, the Leap Year legend comes from an old Scottish law back in the 14th or 15th century. It prescribed a jail penalty for any bachelor who refused to marry a girl who proposed to him. His only escape lay in being able to prove that he had honorable intentions of marrying some other girl. The law evidently must have worked some hardships, but it must have encouraged marriage.

"Now the Leap Year idea with this legend as a background will have a strong fascination for women and not without interest to men. It can be turned into an interest arouser or a discussion.

An Unusual Audience at an Unusual Show

THE most unusual audience that ever witnessed a motion picture performance served as the basic exploitation ingredient of a promotion campaign launched in behalf of a special feature attraction by R. H. Haines, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange of Cincinnati.

As a novelty that may be used by exhibitors with every promise of success Mr. Haines' stunt is declared to be unsurpassed for creating local interest. However, in the previous incident where it was used in Cincinnati, its main accomplishment was to show exhibitors throughout Ohio, what a little novelty preferment can mean.

The central idea around which the plan was formed was to give a motion picture show for those who had never seen a motion picture before in their lives. People who would answer this specification were found through newspaper stories that offered free passes to anyone who would call at the theatre and say they had never seen a motion picture entertainment. In the answers, all of which came by mail, it was discovered that all were invalids, many of whom would never be able to leave wheel chairs.

Arrangements for this entertainment were completed just previous to the release date on "Heart O' The Hills". The novelty of the idea was such that the various Cincinnati newspapers carried big front page stories about the affair which news agencies broadcasted throughout the State.

The Cincinnati Post, sensing the acute human interest in the event, devoted space for a three column illustration of the invalid audience and a story of interesting dimensions. The item was replete with pathetic touches that gracefully blended with the trouble into which Mary Pickford finds herself in "Heart O' The Hills."

One of the audience was blind. However, he experienced as many laugh sensations as any other member for a considerate friend read sub-titles, describing the settings and related the plot of the story. Another person suffering from a toothache disclaimed interest in life temporarily, but when he saw how the blind youth was enjoying the show he became happy also.

So successful was Mr. Haines' promotion stunt that exhibitors throughout Ohio are reported to be showing an interest in providing special entertainments for people who have never seen motion pictures before. It is declared to be a method second to none for securing wide publicity.

Trying to Say It "Different"—Can You Add to This?

HERE'S a little idea that will give a live exhibitor, who likes to make his advertising "stick out," something to think about in idle moments (has he any?). A Famous Players-Lasky Corporation exploitation man, from the Cincinnati Exchange, has been announcing photoplay engagements for so long a time and so often that he is striving to find as many new ways of saying "for one week;" "for two days," etc., etc., as he can. Something different, you know. Here is part of his list to date: Maybe you can use some of these or add your own to the list:

For seven days.
Opening a glorious week.
Seven enchanted days and nights, for "Male and Female."
One Week of Inspiration (for "Miracle Man").
One Wondrous Week (for "Everywoman").
A Week of Delight.
Seven Days of Mirth.
Seven Happy Days.
It Runs (with speed) for a week.
A week of rollicking romance.
Cheer-up Week.
One Week Without Weeps.
A week of perfect pleasure.

This idea was unearthed by the First National Exploitation men and was conducive to a lot of free advetising

"John Brown's Body Lies Moldering in His Grave," But His Children's Children Are Alive

EVIDENTLY there are a lot of "Browns" with brains in the show business. Recently we told you about what Brown of Memphis was doing in exploitation and here is another "Brown" story, this time the tale emanating fom trhe Hoosier state instead of "Bloody Tennessee."

Shortly after word was received in Indianapolis that "In Old Kentucky" was being screened for distribution through First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Floyd Brown, manager of the film division of the H. Lieber Company, holders of the First National franchise in Hoosierdom, began to make preparations for the exploitation of the picture.

Brown recalled that the band which accompanied the famous old melodrama, when it was playing in the "opryhouses" of the state about twenty-five years ago, was organized in Indianapolis and the thought struck him that possibly some of the old-time musicians might be still in the city. At any rate, he decided to find out right away.

He called J. M. Jacobs, film salesman, in off the road and laid the case before him. Now, Jacobs, who has had considerable experience in the show business, is a detective as well as a first-class film salesman. Brown knew that if there was any man in Indianapolis who could possibly learn the whereabouts of the old troupe of colored musicians that man would be Jacobs.

After receiving his instructions, Jacob cast all thoughts of film contracts to the four winds and started out to find the leader of the old brass band. He scoured the colored districts of the city for several days, taking in poolrooms, "crap games" and other places where men of dark color are inclined to frequent and finally found the man he was searching for. Jacobs explained the case to him, told how "In Old Kentucky" has been made bigger and better for the screen and asked him to get the old band together for another tour.

The old colored musician's heart fairly leaped with joy at the suggestion. He had the same old instrument he used when accompanying the stage show tucked safely away at home, he told Jacobs, and he knew that a number of the old-time players would be "tickled out of their skins" to reorganize. Then he started reminiscing, thinking of the good old times they had together when "ole Kentuck," as he called it, was barnstorming in Hoosierdom.

A few days later the old colored leader called Jacobs on the phone and told him that the old band was again practically intact and would begin rehearsals at an early date. That was several weeks ago.

The tour of the band began at Muncie, Ind., on Jan. 4th, and from all accounts this is the feature attraction wherever the film is being played.

Owing to the fact that the natty new uniforms for the band members did not arrive until a few days ago, the re-organized band was not used in the presentation of the picture at its premier at the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, over which fact Manager McCormick is mourning.

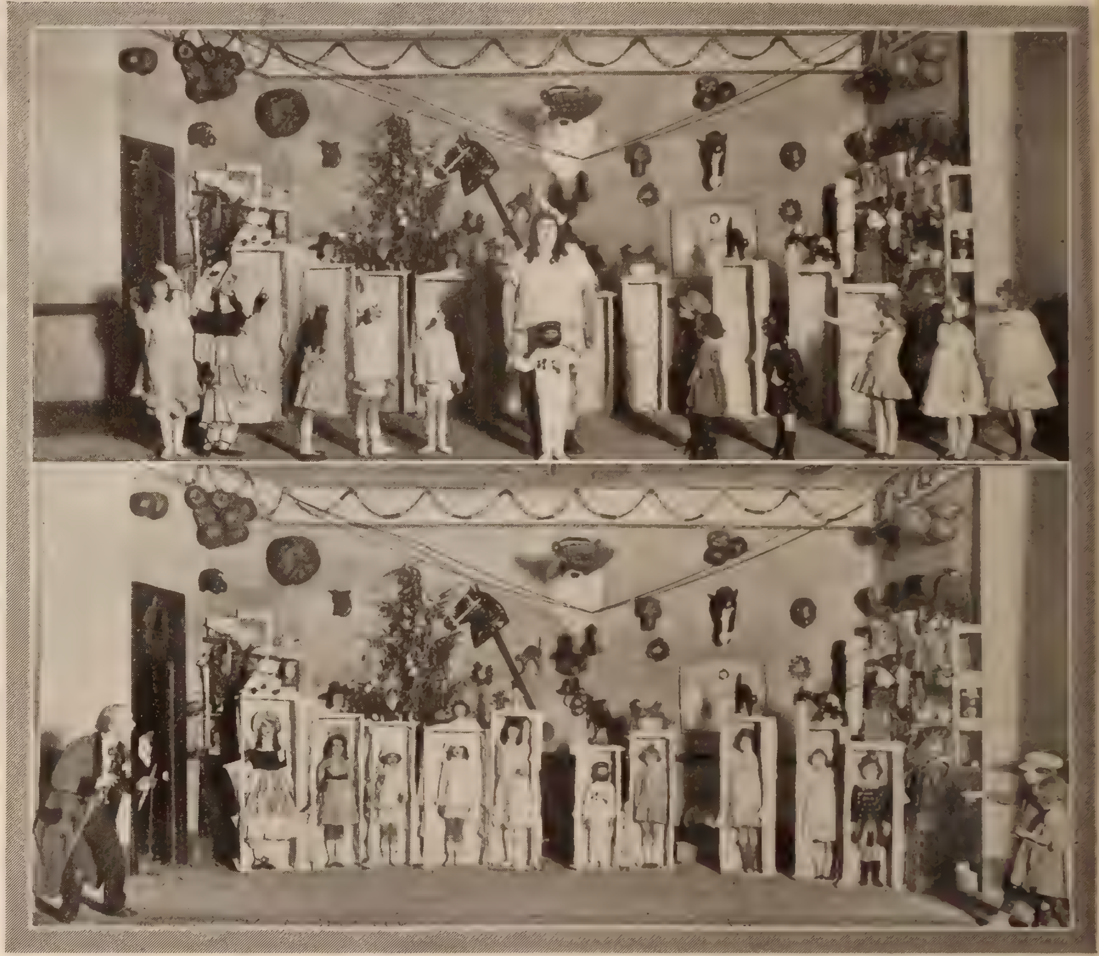
But it has one of the strongest exploitation angles I have seen in some time. It has its root in a vital and timely subject, and my experience has convinced me that this is the basis of every sound exploitation idea."

Our hat is off to both Mr. Shine and Mr. Kahn for this idea and it's development. Our congratulations are extended to the latter gentleman in his foresight in seeing that co-operation between exhibitor and exchange is something to be greatly desired. Here is hoping that every manager of exchanges in the whole world reads this story and finds in it an incentive to see what he can do to help the exhibitors who have booked one of his pictures.

Grauman's Scores with Yule Tide Novelty

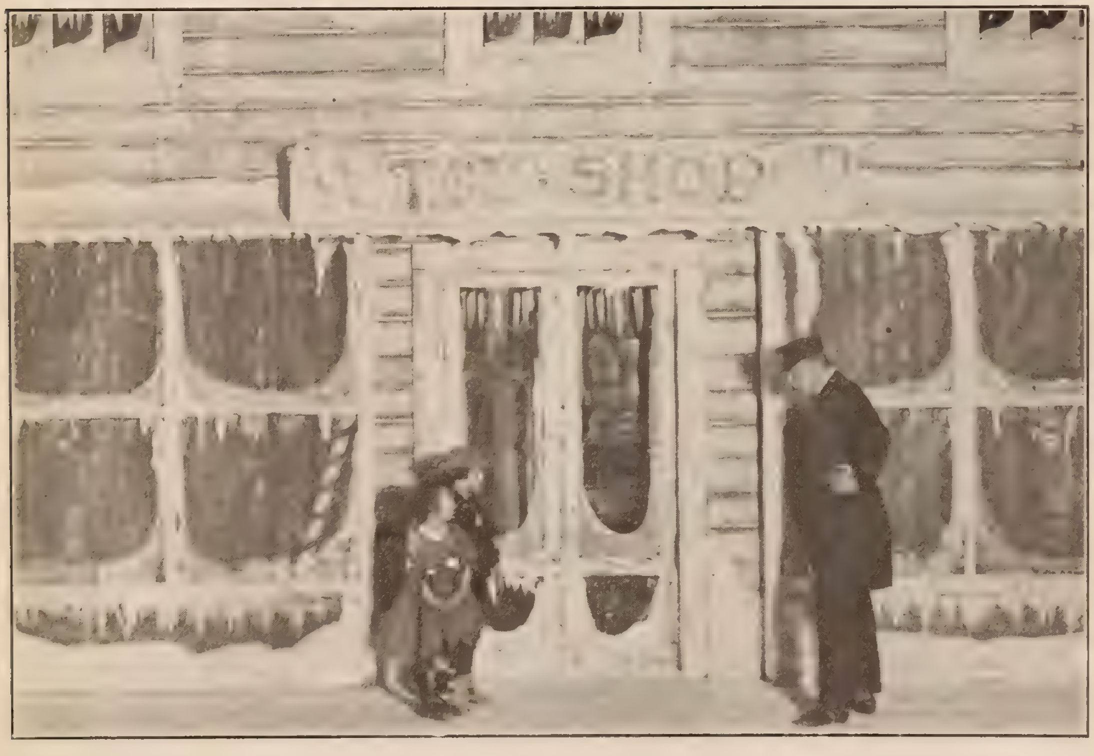
West Coast Metropolis Saw the Most Elaborate Christmas Specialty Staged Anywhere



Two views of the Christmas prologue number staged at Grauman's theatre for the holiday week program. At the top are the "dolls" out of their boxes, and bottom will be seen the same characters reposing within their "pasteboard" covers waiting to be "sold"

One of Sid Grauman's "baby dolls" in his Christmas week specialty described in the accompanying story

QUALITY and Quantity are two things that seldom go hand in hand. When we find quality, be it in the necessities of life or in the amusement field it is seldom that we find quantity an attending element—and this is a rule that ordinarily works both ways, yet exceptions are sometimes found that reveal this combination in a most happy manner. Sid Grauman seems to have found the secret of this combination and demonstrated it in his entertainment presentation at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre during the week of December 29. The feature act, exclusive of the film feature, was a most elaborately staged spectacle entitled "Christmas Eve in a Toy Shop," the timeliness of the production was no less keen than the inimitable way in which it was presented. As the curtains drew back, the frosted exterior of a toy store was revealed, icicles were pendant from every protuberance and the stage floor was sprinkled with sleet. The act opened with a policeman making his rounds, and stopping to peer through the windows of the shop, after which he exits. Next two ragged little street urchins make their entrance, gleefully running from window to window of the Toy Shop and going into ecstacies over the glimpses of dolls and toys the frosted panes reveal. Finally both become sleepy and the little girl lays down just in front of the shop door, while the boy takes off his coat and spreads it over her, to make her comfortable before reclining beside her in sleep. The house is darkened and when the lights come on again the scene shows the interior of the Toy Shop. Mechanical dolls, of which there are a dozen or more, are standing in their boxes, which are arranged in a semi-circle around the stage. The set contains the usual appointments encountered in a toy shop and puttering around among the mechanical dolls is the kindly old Toy Shop Keeper. The two little waifs then enter, and the Shop Keeper makes the mechanical dolls perform for them. Exceptionally clever children were engaged for this portion of the act. One costumed as a colonial belle dances a minuet, while another whistles to the accompaniment of the orchestra. A team of winter-clad little girls execute a Russian Dance, another does a Scotch Hornpipe, and then a little fellow dressed as John Philip Sousa, whiskers and all, steps forward and leads the forty-piece orchestra in "The Vamp." As each of the dolls does its number the old Shop Keeper winds them up in preparation for it. The scene switches to the exterior again, during which time the house is darkened, and the waifs are discovered still asleep, the whole thing having been a dream. The policeman, returning, awakens them and after giving them each a toy, the act closed as all exit.



The stage setting and the three characters of the first and last scenes of the Grauman theatre's Christmas specialty

As a prologue to the Charles Ray picture, "Red Hot Dollars," which was the film feature for the week, a blacksmith was shown at his forge, from which lighting effects were diffused. In a rich baritone voice he sang "My Little Grey Home in the West."

The High Lights of Broadway's Shows

"DOG days" in the middle of January is something of an innovation yet these are "dog days" on Broadway so far as the bills of the leading theatres of New York are concerned. At four houses clustering about Times Square, the Capitol, Rivoli, Strand and Broadway, "Fatty" Arbuckle's latest comedy, "The Garage," holds first place in picture entertainment and be it known that a dog helps mightily in putting this slap stick concoction over.

At the Rialto there is another "dog" picture in "A Twilight Baby." In this the "purp" carries off all acting honors for the first thousand feet of film.

Speaking of comedies, you won't need to be told that when a comedy gets a booking at four Metropolitan theatres, day and date, that it is good. Good is a mild gentle word for this picture. And it isn't funny just because Arbuckle is playing the lead in it either, although he does contribute. The picture has so much new stuff that we lost track of the story, while wiping tears from our eyes, brought on by excessive "he hawing."

We caught "Hank" Mann's "A Twilight Baby" "backwards" and were almost tempted to "walk out on it," for which we would have been sorry, for with the exception of the last few hundred feet this is another comedy bet which no exhibitor can afford to overlook. The "baby stuff" in which the dog we mentioned above figures has never been equaled. It is good for howls of laughter. Most of the scenes where "Hank" Mann plays the "baby" are also mighty good.

The next "highlight" of value to the exhibitor is the use of a prologue number in connection with the overture selected by Dr. Reisenfeld for this week's bill at the Rialto, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice." In about the middle of the rendition the music is stopped and under a spot and before black velvet curtains an actor delivers a soliloquy in which is described the story from which the opera was composed, that of an apprentice to a magician who in his master's absence succeeds by his enchantments in making a broom fetch water, but when the tub was full he discovers that he has forgotten the formula for stopping the work, and in consequence is drowned through his own machinations.

Speaking honestly we don't care so much for the music of this composition which is described in Dr. Reisenfeld's program note as "sort of a musical joke," but it is different and the prologue idea in its rendition makes it a decided novelty. The prologue in use at the Rialto was written by R. A. Barnet and delivered by Maurice Cass in strictly "Shakespearian" style. The feature at the Rivoli, "The Woman in the Suitcase," is deserving of mention as something better than the average. This is a very convincing story, faultlessly produced and admirably acted. It should please any audience.

Timely Tips on Short Subjects

"On a Strike"—Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox Films

THE famous comedians have changed their stuff a bit this week and divide honors with their boss, Bud Fisher. The cartoon number opens showing Mutt and Jeff presenting an ultimatum to Mr. Fisher a la labor union style. Mr. Fisher (the scenes showing the cartoonist are not drawn, but ordinary photography) turns down their demands for more pay and shorter hours and they decide to produce a comedy themselves. They do and present it before an audience, only to find out that it doesn't go. They then eat humble pie and hire out to Bud again.

The number is amusing, perhaps quite as much so as any recent release owing to the novelty of the construction and the opportunities it presents of doing some new things with Mr. Fisher's characters. Especially funny are the pictures Mutt and Jeff themselves draw when they decide to go into the producing business, and need a desk, pen, ink and camera. Incidentally the film gives a small hint of how cartoon comedies are made and of how many pictures are needed for the reel, some three thousand. On the Rivoli program.

The Fishing Village of Otsu

Prizma—Educational—One Reel

THIS is another of the series of Japanese subjects being released by Prizma, and is an interesting reel, showing the scenery, people, customs and vocations of the people of Otsu, a fishing port removed from the more advanced portions of Japan. While too highly colored for the most part to deserve mention as a colored picture, it contains so much of educational value that this shortcoming may be overlooked. Some very interesting types of Japanese people are shown, and the launching of a fishing boat by the primitive old method of "main strength and ignorance" is quite an incident. This is the opening number on the Capitol theatre bill.

And the Cat Came Back

Major Jack Allen Special—Universal

MAJOR ALLEN'S pictures are always notable novelties because they are practical examples of the ingenuity of man, his superiority over the beasts, and contain a great amount of real educareal merit. This one is no exception. Major Allen and his assistant capture a full grown man-eating tiger, "hog-tie" and cart the beast away to later sell him to some "zoo." All this is accomplished without weapons and by the use of a log chain. In viewing the picture you forget that it is only an image you are looking at and begin to wonder if there is any chance of something "slipping" and figure what you would do if the big cat, which is surely mad, should get loose. Here is a picture which should attract all the "animal bugs" in your city. Was presented at the Capitol.

Unusual Strips in This Week's Current Events

"Into the Land of Red Skins and Eskimo—Gaumont

GAUMONT is releasing a news weekly strip this week entitled "Into the Land of the Eskimo and Red Skins," being a trip into Arctic Alaska, showing some of the most remarkable snow and ice scenes we have ever seen. You get a close-up view of what life must be in this land of "eternal snows."

Featured on any bill, it ought to bring a lot of people to the theatre who are attracted there by what they hope to learn more than by the drama presented.

"Mid Summer Night's Dream"—Gaumont

A HUSKY looking specimen of a man walks out into the wild rushing waves of Lake Michigan to take a swim in water that is evidently as cold as the snow and ice over which he travels to get to it. Mr. Swimmer doesn't even bother to wrap himself up while out of the water either before or after his bath. An amusing and interesting bit of film.

Atlantic Fleet Sails for Target Practise—Kinograms

THESE are views of Uncle Sam's giant battleships as they left for the annual target practice. There is a great big "hurrah for the grand old flag" in this, and some of the best views ever obtained of our fleet.

They have been taken at several points, among which is the Brooklyn Bridge, New York and Hampton Roads. Unusually good photography is in evidence on the strips caught at New York, and the size and general make-up of our famous fighting tops come in for a good view.

Flower Pageant at Pasedena, Cal.—Pathe

SOME of the most elaborate floats ever caught by the camera are shown in this strip. Flowers in masses almost beyond belief are used to build these floats and gives an idea of the wealth of vegetation in California. This has all the beauty of a scenic and also a current events interest.

Chinese Troubadors in France—International

AN interesting bit showing Chinese men dancing on stilts garbed in fantastic costumes. A decided novelty. This is stated to be the first time these Chinese actors have appeared outside the Orient.

Baby Day with the Seventh Cavalry—Kinograms

PROUD daddies of the famous Seventh Cavalry bring their babies and wives to headquarters, and colonels, captains and even second lieutenants inspect the embryo soldiers. Will go good with the women, as a number of very cute kiddies are shown. In one sequence the colonel has an armful of "wigglers."

Harvard-Oregon Foot Ball Game—Pathe

SHOWS some good views of this great sporting event, including one of the field goals. Several spectacular runs were caught by the camera. The strip at the Capitol is rather short, having been trimmed. In the original it gave a very good idea of the game.

Thousands Witness First Aero Derby—Gaumont

WITHOUT explanation that this is the first aeroplane race to be officially staged, same being recently held at Mt. Tomalpais, Cal., this would not be identified as a race, but it does have some good shots of the aeroplanes in flight, and of the earth beneath the machines. Carries added interest for the information carried in the titles.

New York Hospital Adopts New Method of Identifying Babies—Gaumont

VIEWS of the way the Bertillion system is being applied for the identification of children born in the hospital. Principally interesting from its educational angle.

Live News from the Producers

Minter Feature Almost Finished

MARY MILES MINTER is completing "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," her second Realart picture, according to reports from the Realart offices. Like other Realart productions, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor" is adapted from a popular novel, and this is said to be the definite policy followed by the company since its very beginning when "pictures based on successful stories and plays" was promulgated as the official slogan. As a novel, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," from the pen of Grace Miller White, was originally published by the Harvey K. Fly Publishing Company of New York City.

In announcing this second offering for Mary Miles Minter, President Morris Kohn of Realart, emphasized particularly the story-background. He says:

"The dramatization of this classic is designed especially for the millions of American young men and women who have read the story in book form, who have lived with its human characters and who will grasp at the oportunity to see it well done on the screen.

"Judy of Rogues' Harbor" Said to Be Good Vehicle for Star

"'Judy of Rogues' Harbor' is a particularly suitable vehicle for Miss Minter, the actress who appeals to hearts of high and low estate. One proof of the wide range of the novel and of the fact that it is not limited to any one locality or territory is that Grosset and Dunlap have followed the original publishers with a special edition, at reasonable price, which will be sold broad-cast through the country, in cities and hamlets.

"This is the basis with which exhibitors are able to start. They have a story which is already known and which continues to be known as long as it continues to be sold. It is a story so popular that a second publisher takes it up and turns out a vast new edition for use by everyone. Exhibitors have in the principal role an actress, who represents the universal something about American girlhood, the youth, the charm, the romance, that go to make up her true character. They have also an actress of long experience and definite popularity.

"In her first Realart offering, 'Anne of Green Gables,' Miss Minter established the reputation among showmen everywhere of being a consistent box-office attraction. She not only charmed her audiences but made money for her exhibitors, and there was a continuous cry of 'More Minter pictures.' Here is Miss Minter again, in a story that brings out the best of her."

"The production of 'Judy of Rogues' Harbor' will everlastingly establish Mary Miles Minter," declared Director Taylor in a statement to Realart Pictures Corporation. "The story has more marked dramatic possibilities than anything in which she has previously been cast.

Hall-Room Comedies Are Well-Liked, Say Cohns

Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the Hall-Room Comedies, report that they are the recipients of many letters from exhibitors, in which the showmen that have already shown some of the series speak in high terms of the satisfactory way the pictures have been going over with their audiences. In addition to the laugh-getting qualities of the pictures, say the producers, the clean tone of the comedies have also received the special commendation of the exhibitors.

Corinne Griffith Keeps Up Busy Pace at Work

Corinne Griffith is sustaining her reputation of keeping everlastingly at it at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio. At present she has two features ready for release, "Human Collateral" and "Deadline at Eleven," and has begun active work on another, "the Momento," a five reel version of one of the O. Henry stories.

"Human Collateral" is nearing its release date. This story is an adaptation by Sam Taylor from "The Last Woman," an original story by Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey.

"Deadline at Eleven" is a newspaper story, written by Ruth Byers, a newspaper woman, and adapted to the screen by Lucien Hubbard, a former newspaper editor. Frank Thomas, Webster Campbell, Maurice Costello, Dodson Mitchell, Ernest Lambert, Alice Calhoun and Emily Fitzroy, appear in the supporting cast. George Fawcett directed.

Tom Mix Thrills in "The Cyclone," Says Fox

Tom Mix is said by Fox officials to be at his top notch in "The Cyclone." The story is dedicated to the Northwest Mounted Police.

"Action is the keynote of every Tom Mix production—the kind of action in which he is at home and of which he is master—the kind that thrills the spectator from start to finish," announces a report from the Fox Film offices.

Coleen Moore plays opposite the cowboy star in "The Cyclone." The supporting cast includes Henry Hebert and William Ellingford. Cliff Smith is the director, and Col. Todhunter Marigold is the author of the story.

National Film States Its Comedy Program

The National Film Corporation of America announces that comedies will play an important role in its 1920 production plans. That concern has adopted the slogan "Fun Without a Blush" for its comedy exploitation. This slogan will be more than a mere phrase, according to L. Bernstein, production manager, as none but comedies of clean, wholesome fun will be screened by that concern. This applies to the Flanagan and Edwards comedies, and to the Neal Burns Capital comedies, the latter being a Goldwyn release.

"A Woman in Grey" Will Be Well Exploited

It is reported that extensive plans have been arranged for the exploitation of the Serico Producing Corporation's mystery serial "A Woman in Grey," starring Arline Pretty supported by Henry G. Sell and directed by James Vincent. "The exhibitors who book 'A Woman in Grey' may feel assured that they will have at their command not only a large assortment of advertising accessories, but that they will be assisted by a newspaper and billboard campaign that will reach from Coast to Coast," announces the Serico Producing Corporation.

"A Woman in Grey," which is being disposed of on the state right basis, is said to be rapidly closing out its territory in the United States. The foreign rights have been purchased by the Export and Import Film Co., Inc.

New Supreme Comedy Is Said to Be Best Yet

"Her Nearly Husband," a Supreme Comedy, is the Robertson-Cole offering for fun and frolic for the current week. The story is from the pen of Frank Roland Conklin. Teddy Sampson and Harry Depp are featured and from those who witnessed previews of the comedy, this duo is better than any ever before issued, according to Robertson-Cole.

Scott Sidney directed the chaser of blues, and Bert Wright was in charge of the camera. W. Scott Darling prepared the story for the screen. Officials of Robertson-Cole announce that "so successfully have first run exhibitors taken this class of refined comedy that extra prints are made necessary each week."

"Haunting Shadows" to Feature H. B. Warner

Robertson-Cole Company states that H. B. Warner has the most effective role of his picture career in "Haunting Shadows," his latest Robertson-Cole production. "Haunting Shadows" is a screen adaptation of "The House of a Thousand Candles."

TITLE OF ROBERTSON-COLE FILM CHANGED

SO as to give Robertson-Cole exhibitors the full value of the original title of Kathleen Norris' magazine success, Robertson-Cole has changed the title of the latest Bessie Barriscale release from "Woman and Wife" to "The Luck of Geraldine Laird."

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation in announcing the change of title issued the following statement, "Robertson-Cole exhibitors should be given the full force of the advertising value of the original story. It is a well-known fact that Kathleen Norris is one of the best writers of fiction of the day. 'The Luck of Geraldine Laird' is said to be one of her best efforts and it is known from Coast to Coast, having run in serial form in one of the leading magazines."

Mae Marsh To Start Work Soon

Will Begin Robertson-Cole Feature Soon in California

SOME time ago Louis J. Gasnier and Sydney L. Cohan issued an announcement to the effect that they had a long time contract with Mae Marsh. Soon after this statement Miss Marsh announced that her productions would be released by Robertson-Cole. Now comes the report that Miss Marsh is in the West and preparing to start the first of her 1920 productions under the Robertson-Cole banner. Coincident with this report is another to the effect that Louis J. Gasnier, director of the Robertson-Cole's current attraction, "The Beloved Cheater" has returned to Glendale, California, after spending ten days in conference with officials of Robertson-Cole at the New York office.

While in New York, Mr. Gasnier had several conferences with Mae Marsh, and final plans were made for the carrying out of Miss Marsh's contract for Robertson-Cole's special productions. Mr. Gasnier has promised Robertson-Cole to secure a director of note for Miss Marsh, but he will personally supervise all of the Marsh features, it is reported. At the present time, Mae Marsh is busy at work with scenario experts preparing for the first story.

"I am more than pleased to handle Mae Marsh productions" said Mr. Gasnier. "She is an actress of note and one of the screen's lasting favorites. From "The Birth of a Nation" to other Griffith successes she has run the gamut of her profession, and I believe that in the next production which will be written for her natural ability—she will be even a greater Mae Marsh.

"Robertson-Cole is determined to get the best productions that money and time can purchase. This is the right way to make pictures. First the star, then director, the story, and then the cast, is the best method to pursue and success will follow. We have a free hand to make the Mae Marsh productions elaborate, and all of special merit with an especial view to box office success.

"In making the Marsh features for Robertson-Cole, we are going to establish a standard and keep to that standard. I have promised to give Mae Marsh new Marsh pictures and Robertson-Cole has promised the exhibitor to back these productions with national advertising and publicity campaigns and dignified exploitation in keeping with the production."

Territory Is Acquired on "The Confession"

The Robbins Film Company of Utica, of which Nate Robbins is president, has purchased "The Confession," National Film Corporation feature, for upper New York State, according to an announcement by Joe Brandt, general representative for National.

Robbins announced that Lester Wolf, formerly with Vitagraph and General, would take over the Western management of "The Confession," while Nathan Dobson, formerly of Paramount, would have charge of Eastern bookings. The Robbins organization is said to be now dickering for four or five of the most important features on the state rights market.

Powers Machine Sale Greater Than Recorded

In the announcement last week of the taking over of the agency for Powers machines in France, Belgium and Switzerland by the Fox Company, an error was made in the number of machines sold by the Walterdaw Co., of England. It should have read "over 4,000" instead of the mere 1,200 reported.

This deal negotiated by Mr. J. Leo for the Fox Company and W. C. Smith for the Nicholas Power Co., was the means of completing the representation of Powers machine throughout the world.

Screen Committee Issues Report

State's Ready Response Has Been Received from Exhibitors

IT is reported that rapid progress is being made by the Screen Protection Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The movement for the protection of the screen against improper advertising has spread from coast to coast and the slogan "the screens of the country belong to the exhibitors" has found a ready echo among individual exhibitors as well as among the different organized groups of exhibitors. In describing the results which the committee has already attained, the following report has been issued from the office of the Committee of Protection of the Screen at Room 708, Times Building, New York.

"In the course of the last week the responses from bona-fide exhibitors' organizations have been especially gratifying. Thus the exhibitors' circuit of Texas, with headquarters at Dallas, has formally announced its acceptance of the activities and recommendations of the screen protection committee. The Board of Directors of the Texas Exhibitors' Circuit consisting of eight theatre owners met at Dallas announcing their decision. This circuit also comprises a large membership of exhibitors in the states of Arkansas and Oklahoma.

"Immediately following this endorsement by the Texas Exhibitors' Circuit news was received at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to the effect that the North West Exhibitors' Protective League had held a meeting on January 7, at Minneapolis. At this meeting it was announced that the remnants of the old Black organization in the northwestern territory had disbanded and gone over in a body to the Protective League. The session at Minneapolis was attended by representative exhibitors from the states of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan. A resolution was passed providing for complete supervision of all screen advertising by the proper officials of the organization. Contracts were signed by practically the entire membership, and the money derived from all screen advertising is to go in the state treasury. The meeting was presided over by the President, Charles W. Gates, of Aberdeen, S. D.

"On top of enthusiastic endorsement by the Protective League came the equally enthusiastic support of the Exhibitors' Circuit of the Northwest, consisting of representative motion picture theatre owners from the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. This organization sent several imposing envelopes to the headquarters of the Screen Protection Committee containing the entire membership which covers a territory of 200 towns and cities.

"In addition to this the Screen Protection Committee is daily receiving unsolicited wires and letters of inquiry from the New England states and from New Jersey. All these wires and letters heartily commend the stand of the Screen Protection Committee and ask for an opportunity to co-operate. These territories are now being rapidly covered by the Screen Protection Committee.

"The members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York were pleased to receive their first check on account of the arrangement made for screen advertising. This check was in payment for the display of a short reel by the members of the organization. All the exhibitors who had run this short reel say that their patrons were well pleased for it gave a lot of excellent entertainment which was especially interesting to their women patrons.

"The following exhibitors have been added to the Screen Supervising Committee: Charles W. Gates, H. L. Mitchel, E. T. Peter, James Q. Clemmer, H. B. Wright, Glen Harper, H. B. Varner and George W. Warner.

"Mingled frequently with inquiries and words of approval the Screen Protection Committee received many communications asking for the date of the coming national gathering. It is the intention of the Screen Protection Committee and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to make a thorough canvass of the leading exhibitors in every state as to what time and place would be most suitable to them. As soon as this canvass is completed the date and place will be fixed and given the widest publicity.

Walter Hall with Newly Organized Company

Walter Richard Hall has been engaged by George H. Wiley, president of the newly formed Hyperion Productions, Inc., to make the screen adaptations of the books and plays acquired by the company.

Under the new arrangement, Hall will have entire charge of the selection of all stories and plays purchased by the company as well as making the screen adaptations. He will not be bound by any restrictions to please any certain star, as the policy of the new company is to select a group of stars for each production, the stars to fit the requirements of the characters that each story calls for.

Metro Buys Stage Success

"The Marriage of William Asche" Is Latest Literary Acquisition of Note

"THE Marriage of William Asche," dramatized by Margaret Mayo from the novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward, has been added to Metro's list of plays acquired as material for its "fewer and better" pictures. In announcing the purchase, Metro officials let it be known that in their negotiations to obtain the world rights to the drama they had to overcome considerable opposition in the shape of keen bidding for it by rival producing companies.

This drama of high English social life is international in its fame. It was played in London with Fanny Ward in the leading role of Kitty Asche, and also was used as a starring vehicle by Grace George, having been produced in New York under the management of William A. Brady at the Garrick theatre in November, 1905.

Metro takes the occasion of the purchase of "The Marriage of William Asche" to announce its policy in acquiring popular stories and stage productions. "Acquisition of 'The Marriage of William Asche,'" says Metro's report, "accentuates the fact that Metro is fast garnering in the choicest literary material on the market for the use of its individual stars, and for all-star productions. It is the Metro policy to buy only stage plays or widely read novels. Purchase of 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, was the outstanding buy of the year just past.

"'Polly with a Past,' by Guy Bolton and George Middleton, for Ina Claire; 'Fine Feathers,' the powerful play by Eugene Walters; 'Quincy Adams Sawyer,' the novel by Charles Felton Pidgin; 'The Gorgeous Girl,' a novel by Nalbro Bartley, now running serially in the Saturday Evening Post; 'Parlor, Bedroom and Bath,' the comedy by Mark Swan and C. W. Bell; and 'The Skylark,' a novel by William Wallace Crooke, are among Metro's other recent purchases of screen material."

Stewart Vehicle Completed

Mayer Announces Completion of "The Fighting Shepherdess" in the West

THE Louis B. Mayer-First National production, "The Fighting Shepherdess," Anita Stewart's new starring vehicle, has been completed at the Mayer Studios at Los Angeles. Edward Jose directed the picture, which is founded on the novel by Caroline Lockhart of the same name.

The cast supporting Miss Stewart includes, it is said, a number of well-known players. Noah Beery, who plays Mormon Joe, it will be remembered, was featured in the title-role of "The Sea Wolf" and "The Sagebrusher." Wallace MacDonald will be seen as Hughie Disston. He has recently been leading man for Marguerite Clark, Madge Kennedy, Mary MacLaren and Bessie Love. Walter Long, who portrays the villainous Pete Mullendore, has been in D. W. Griffith's productions, having a very important part in "Scarlet Days." Eugenie Besserer, who impersonates Jezebel, the road-house keeper, has also been with Griffith productions, giving what many critics have maintained the finest performance in "Scarlet Days." Another member of the cast is John Hall, who previously co-starred with Al Jennings in a series of Western productions. Gibson Gowland will take the part of Bowers, the loyal sheep-herder.

The scenario was written by Frank M. Dazey

F. F. Feist Meets Exhibitors

Says Exhibitors Are Anxious to Know More About Goldwyn's New Policies

AFTER nearly a week spent in Chicago, the first stop on his two-months' trip across the country, Felix F. Feist, vice-president and manager of sales for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, left January 10 for St. Louis where he will stay three days before going to Kansas City for the remainder of the week.

Making his headquarters at the Chicago branch, Mr. Feist is said to have received visits from many of the leading exhibitors of this city and the surrounding territory, who were reported to be anxious to get advance information direct from Goldwyn's sales-manager in reference to the company's enlarged projects for the coming year.

Although the Goldwyn producing and distributing policy for 1920 has been outlined in previous announcements, Mr. Feist found that many exhibitors, it is said, were anxious to know more about the plans in detail, especially as they relate to the marketing of the special productions, the Eminent Authors Pictures, starting with "The Cup of Fury," and the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" Comedies.

In commenting on the short subjects, Mr. Feist spoke of the increased activities of the Bray Studios, which, in addition to the Pictograph, soon will issue the Goldwyn-Bray Comics and the Goldwyn-Bray Graphic. Each series, it is promised, will be a weekly release of high entertainment value.

New Stunt on "Empty Arms"

"One Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet" for Exhibitor Scrutiny Before Booking

DESPITE its mystery-steeped title, "The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet" is not a serial. It is a completely novel exploitation "stunt" issued by Lester Park and Edward Whiteside in connection with their unusual production, "Empty Arms," starring Gail Kane.

The Packet opens with an explanation—"Why we refused One Hundred Thousand Dollars for 'Empty Arms,' and then describes the interview in which that amount was refused as a guarantee on the profits, when offered by a well-known distributor. Quite an interesting situation was developed at that very interview when the advertising manager very dramatically showed what is termed "The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet." This piece of literature contains a series of arguments, doctrines and proofs of the tremendous interest which is rife in every community on the subject of "Empty Arms," and demonstrates that, in every large community, the value of One Hundred Thousand Dollars already exists in the vast amount of public interest which has already been aroused.

The first part of The One Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet is filled with stories by District Attorneys, club women and public officials. The second part is devoted to a complete exploitation campaign which any theatre manager may hand over to his assistant to carry out.

Before showing "Empty Arms" to the prospective buyers a copy of "The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet" is presented to them. The buyer is requested to read it carefully before seeing the picture.

Lester Park, when interviewed yesterday, said: "The reason we are following this method of procedure is that we want our buyers to realize how thoroughly the country is aroused on the subject of "Empty Arms."

THOUSANDS TURNED AWAY AT "PINTO" OPENING

FIVE thousand people were unable to see Mabel Normand in "Pinto" when it was shown for the first time at the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, Sunday, January 11. Even bigger than "Jinx" is the verdict received after the initial presentations of Miss Normand's latest Goldwyn Picture, written and produced by Victor Schertzinger.

The first wife, entirely unsolicited, received at the Goldwyn home office after the showing of the picture, was from Toledo, O., under date of January 11th. It reads:

MABEL NORMAND IN PINTO OPENED TODAY THE PANTHEON THEATRE BREAKING ALL PREVIOUS RECORDS EXCEPT ONE STOP ADVANCED PRICES STOP STRONGEST COMPETITION TOLEDO HAS EVER KNOWN IN A SINGLE WEEK.

H. C. HORATER.

From Columbus, Will D. Harris wired he turned away 5,000 people half of whom have bought tickets for admittance another day.

Robertson-Cole Issues New Scenic Adventure

"I and the Mountain" is the name of the third scenic adventure production to be released by Robertson-Cole. "I and the Mountain," against the background of the scenic beauty, is said to bring home the fact that everything cannot be learned in a college. "Adventure Scenics were all booked by the Capitol theatre in New York, and leading exhibitors throughout the country have successfully displayed them," states Robertson-Cole.

"The Gray Brother" to Be Released Soon

Edward A. MacManus expects to announce the release of his latest production, "The Gray Brother," this week. Thomas Mott Osborne, former warden of Sing Sing, supplied the story. Sidney Olcott directed the picture.

"All of the characters with one exception are from the criminal classes, and the narrative lends itself to numerous thrilling situations."

Alice Joyce Favorably Greeted in New Film

Alice Joyce's new Vitagraph production, "Slaves of Pride," which is being featured in a pre-release showing at the B. S. Moss Broadway theatre, has been favorably received by the reviewers of the New York dailies, says a report from the Vitagraph offices. "Slaves of Pride" has furnished Miss Joyce with one of the best roles of her career, it is said, and the sumptuous settings and commendable support of the rest of the cast have assured the star a favorable reception.

Sennett Comedy Revived

Six-Reel Subject, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," on the State Right Market

IT is predicted by W. H. Productions Co. that "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the six-reel Mack Sennett comedy which is being released on the state rights market by Tower Film Corporation, will be a bigger box office attraction as a revival than it was when first released. "And for these reasons," says the report from the W. H. Productions' office.

"The huge success with which 'Tillie's Punctured Romance' met, and the popular applause with which it was received throughout the country spread a reputation for that production, such as no amount of paid advertising could hope to accomplish. The picture broke every known precedent. It is comedy, good spontaneous fun and side-splitting laughter throughout every inch of the six reels. Everyone talked about 'Tillie's Punctured Romance.'

"In the revival of 'Tillie's Punctured Romance' audiences will be doubled. Those who have seen this production know how funny it is! They know how they laughed till they cried when they first saw this group of famous comedians in a hilarious comedy—stars like Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin and Mack Swain, in one cast. They will want to see it again. Those who did not see it when it was first shown have heard how good it is, and now they will not let the chance slip by to see the feature comedy about which they have heard so much.

"'Tillie's Punctured Romance' went over without a single line of exploitation. However, Tower Film Corporation state that an intensive exploitation campaign is being inaugurated for this comedy which will outdo anything ever attempted for a feature of this kind."

Robertson-Cole Film Scores

Reports of Success of "The Beloved Cheater" Received from Many Points

"THE BELOVED CHEATER," the January Robertson-Cole special starring Lew Cody, is said to be meeting with success everywhere. "So numerous have been the additional orders from first-run houses for this big special that officials of Robertson-Cole are shipping extra prints to every section of the United States," announces a report from the New York office of Robertson-Cole.

"'The Beloved Cheater' exceeded our fondest expectations," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. "We knew we had a real special—a special that meant dollars and cents for the exhibitor and real enjoyment for the fan. To see it is to book it. This has been proven time and time again during the past month and the first of the Lew Cody specials is going faster with time.

"Among the latest bookings for 'The Beloved Cheater,' says A. S. Kirkpatrick, Gen. Mgr., "are the three big motion-picture temples in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. As soon as bookers from Ruben-Finkelstein's saw the picture they contracted with our Minneapolis exchange for first runs. At the New Garrick in Minneapolis this big Robertson-Cole special will be featured the entire week of February 15 and at the New Garrick in St. Paul, the Lew Cody feature will be played the week of January 18th. The same picture will be the featured attraction at the New Garrick in Duluth during the week of January 18th.

Spurious "Griffith" Features

D. W. Griffith Warns Against Productions, Falsely Called "Griffith's"

D. W. GRIFFITH, through his general manager, Albert L. Grey, has issued a general warning to all exhibitors, and through them to their patrons, not to accept any motion picture production as being "A Griffith Picture" unless the initials, "D. G." and the written name, "Griffith," are stamped on the main title and on important sub-titles.

Recently Mr. Griffith's attention has been directed to certain pictures about to be released as "Griffith productions," one of the announcements as recent as January 12, going so far as to say, "one of the best productions made by the D. W. Griffith combination."

Last week Mr. Griffith's general manager came across an announcement calling attention to a picture, entitled "Tiger Girl," and among other statements came to one reading: "A large advertising campaign will be begun to acquaint the public with this production, and exhibitors will have the same opportunity to cash in on this feature as they have on Mr. Griffith's more recent productions." When Mr. Griffith's attention was called to the advertisement, he issued the following statement:

"All genuine Griffith productions carry the initials, D. W., and the written name, Griffith, on the main title as well as on the important subtitles, and any motion picture offered without these trade marks not only is fraudulent, but is being foisted on the exhibitors, and the public in a direct attempt to mislead and deceive.

"In justice to all concerned, I hereby ask all exhibitors, for the protection of themselves and their patrons, not to advertise any picture as a Griffith production unless it carries the above trade marks."

"Eyes of Youth" Consistent in Scoring Records

"Eyes of Youth," the first release of the Equity Pictures Corporation, continues to create new records in many towns.

At Albany, N. Y., it played to 60 per cent. more business than any previous picture, was brought back for a repeat and again attracted more than the usual amount of patronage.

At the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., in the face of three of the coldest days the city has ever known, the house record was broken and it is to be brought back for a repeat.

At the Ohio theatre, Indianapolis, "Eyes of Youth" opened to $2000 on New Year's Day and, contrary to expectations, played to within $40 on Friday of its holiday total.

At Pittsburgh, it played two houses simultaneously, and in spite of zero weather, an unusual condition in Pittsburgh, the record of the Grand theatre was broken, as was that of Clark & Rowland's Liberty theatre.

One of the most remarkable booking achievements in the history of local exchanges is reported by Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, which handles the Equity productions in New York. He reports that thirty-three theatres on Broadway from Loew's Greeley Square to the Majestic on 181st street and Broadway have either played the picture or are playing it. This includes some instances in which "Eyes of Youth" has played in theatres only one block apart.

Wholesome Film Company Plans for Further Productions

M. Feldstein, head of the Wholesome Film Company of Chicago, whose first three releases have been placed on a state rights basis, is so pleased with the popularity which these early Wholesome Productions have met with that he has entered into negotiations with the parties who control the rights to several of the best known children's stories on the market, with the end in view of adding them to the Wholesome program.

Judging from results from the advertising campaign recently opened in the pages of the trade papers, state right buyers have had their eyes opened to the fact that good, clean, well-made subjects appealing primarily to children are in great demand, not only by theatres for special children's performances, but for use in Civic Centers, Schools, and organizations.

Four Broadway Houses Play Arbuckle's Comedy

For what is described by Famous-Players as the first time in motion picture history a comedy was featured this week simultaneously in New York's four biggest picture theatres. "Fatty" Arbuckle in the Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy, "The Garage," held the screen at the Rivoli, the Broadway, the Strand and the Capitol.

United Theatres Issues Aids

Press Book Prepared for "Corsican Brothers" Said to Have Good Ideas

INASMUCH as "The Corsican Brothers will be released by the United Picture Theatres of America as a special feature, it is in line with the policy of the releasing organization that a specially prepared press book be issued for the attraction.

The following statement has been issued by the United Picture Theatres of America in description of the press book prepared for this production:

"The press book for this feature consists of twelve pages with covers in colors. A study of it shows that it contains suggestions and ideas along every line of exploitation and publicity that will be of benefit to the theatre owner. Crowded into its pages will be found a wealth of result-bringing and original ideas that will go a long way toward helping the exhibitor put 'The Corsican Brothers' over to record breaking business. The suggestions are adaptable for both the large and small theatres—they are easily arranged and at small cost.

"Among many other interesting items contained in the press book is a full page showing the various styles of posters available on the attraction. This paper has been carefully and specially prepared and lithographed in full colors. United points with pride to these posters as being some of the finest examples of the lithographer's art produced in some months.

"There is no attempt to promote 'circus' methods of advertising. Throughout the press book, the idea is always brought out that 'The Corsican Brothers' should be advertised in a refined and dignified way."

Goldwyn Films for Capitol

"The Paliser Case" and "Pinto" Scheduled for Showing in Broadway House

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces that E. J. Bowes, managing director of the Capitol theatre, New York, has selected two more Goldwyn Pictures for presentation at an early date. They are "Pinto," starring Mabel Normand, and "The Paliser Case," starring Pauline Frederick. These, it is stated, will make four Goldwyn productions chosen as feature attractions for the Capitol since it was opened in the fall. The others, which have played at the new Broadway house, are Rex Beach's "The Girl from Outside" and Mabel Normand in "Jinx."

Goldwyn, in commenting on the booking of these features for the Capitol, says: "In looking for the highest types of drama and comedy, Manager Bowes found in 'The Paliser Case' and 'Pinto' just the qualities he sought. He booked the pictures immediately after the private showings in the projection room at the Capitol and soon will decide on the weeks for their presentation. Miss Normand is generally conceded to be one of the most popular of all picture stars with Broadway audiences, and recent records show that the name of Miss Frederick is certain to draw big attendances wherever it is flashed in electric lights."

"The Paliser Case" is from the novel by Edgar Saltre and is the first picture directed by William Parke for Goldwyn. This production is said to be one in which Miss Frederick gives one of the most intense emotional character portrayals of her entire screen career. The question of who committed the murder around which the story centers is not answered until the close of the baffling drama, it is stated.

Unlike "Jinx," but equally strong in its comedy points, is said to be Mabel Normand's "Pinto," written and produced by Victor Schertzinger. The opening sequences are laid in the West,

Prohibition Days? Harold Lloyd's Heady Comic Aids

HAROLD LLOYD'S third release of his two-reel comedy series, entitled "From Hand to Mouth," is due to add considerably to the prestige which that young comedian has already won by his showing in "Bumping Into Broadway" and "Captain Kidd's Kids," the two previous releases of the series, which are being distributed by Pathe Exchange. "From Hand to Mouth" is more than a title; it is an achievement in the development of clean, wholesome comedy. At least that's the way we felt about it, after seeing Harold in his latest over at the Strand one afternoon recently when we decided that a few hours off duty were properly in order.

After escaping, unseen and unchallenged, from the din and litter of the editorial room, we hurried out into the fog, which, serving in lieu of an effective smoke-screen, made our "get-away" an assured success. Once out of port, our convoy headed in the general direction of Sixth avenue and Forty-second street and eventually dropped anchor, wraps and umbrellas in the cheery haven of ıck's restaurant, opposite the Hipporome. The mysteries of the menu ıving been solved and the "winest" duly lamented over with remiscences of "other days," mess was rved with Joseph Reddy of the athe publicity department acting as ine genial host. Upon the adjournent of the luncheon session, the conıy again got under way, with "Joe" ill at the helm, and coursed north v west for the Strand, where we ound Harold Lloyd's two-reeler ıaring equal honors with the Norma almadge feature, "A Daughter of wo Worlds," on the electric sign ut front.

At the time of our entry, the Taladge picture was claiming the atten on of the audience. A song number ollowed, and then to the accompaniıent of a lively tune by the Strand rchestra, the Lloyd comedy, "From Iand to Mouth," came reeling on its ıerry way. The slight plot, which inked the various comedy incidents that Lloyd engaged in, was concerned with the abduction of a fair young heiress, in the person of Mildred Davis, by a gang of "rough-necks" under the leadership of Snub Pollard, and her subsequent rescue and restoration to fortune by the valiant Harold. What Lloyd did to thwart the diabolical designs—soft, soft music in a minor chord—of this rascally crew kept the Strand audience in a steady ripple of merriment and frequently provoked a general outburst of mirth as the star put over some exceptional piece of action.

Laughable situations of an original character, the traditional chase enlivened by novel "stunts" and humorous innovations, and, through it all, the swift-moving action and comical capers of the nimble star stamp the production as a top-notch comedy—the kind that sends you out with a grin on your face and a smile in your heart.—*E. R. Walsh Will Produce a Picture Minus Title

R. A. Walsh, director of the R. A. Walsh Productions, and associated with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation and the Realart Pictures Corporation, is out to produce what is described as "the first titleless picture." The only title in the Walsh production would be the name of the story.

Commenting on the plan to make a titleless picture, the following statement has been issued by the R. A. Walsh Productions:

"Mr. Walsh holds that a title is an apology at its best and has no place in the photoplay. Dwelling on the stand that fundamentally it is the director's function to tell a story, Mr. Walsh made it clear that although he believes in writing his own story, if he reads a yarn that suggests moving picture possibilities, he considers it without bias. He points out that the mere fact that the director thinks enough of the story to consider it for the screen, makes the story an original one as far as the photoplay adaption is concerned."

Territories Sold on the Essanay-Chaplin Films

Sales for the five Essanay-Chaplin productions under the control of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., were reported this week through the New York office. Victor Kremer, at present touring the west in the interest of his productions, has sold Kentucky for "The Champion," "Work," "Jitney Elopement," and "By the Sea." to the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Louisville, Ky.

Bert Lubin, special traveling representative of the Kremer organization, reports the sale of Louisiana and Mississippi for the four Chaplins mentioned above, in addition to the feature Chaplin, "A Burlesque on Carmen," to A. C. Bromberg of Atlanta, Ga. Lubin has already consummated a deal whereby Mr. Bromberg acquired the five Kremer Chaplins for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina.

Mrs. Chaplin's Initial Mayer Film Finished

"Polly of the Storm Country," which will be Mildred Harris Chaplin's first Louis B. Mayer production, has just been finished at the Louis B. Mayer Studios in Los Angeles.

The story, it is stated, was written especially for Mrs. Chaplin by Grace Miller White, author of "Tess of the Storm Country," and "The Secret of the Storm Country." After turning the script over to Mrs. Chaplin, Miss White wrote the story in novel form, and it will be published by Little, Brown and Company of Boston, simultaneously with the appearance of the picture on the screen, according to reports.

The production was directed by Arthur H. Rossom. It will be released through First National Exhibitors Circuit some time in February.

Announces Plans for Drew-Street Comics

With the completion of "The Charming Mrs. Chase," the first of the series of Mrs. Sidney Drew's two-reel comedies, adapted from stories by Julian Street, in which John Cumberland is starred, Pathe announces February 22 as release date for the first of the series. There will be eight of these modern comedy studies.

All exhibitors admit that there is a shortage of good comedies, and these Drew productions, it is claimed, are going to go a long way toward meeting the demand. The Drew comedies are not to be sold individually and not more than nor less than eight are to be contracted for.

Fox Reports on "The Strongest"

Out of Five Versions Takes One Judged Most Effective

THE Fox Film Corporation has issued a statement in connection with its forthcoming production of "The Strongest," the picturization of Clemenceau's romantic novel. The statement announces:

"Five versions of 'The Strongest' by Premier Clemenceau of France have been viewed by a jury at the projection rooms of Fox Film Corporation which means that practically all the scenes in the production were taken five times. The jury decided which of the five in their expert judgment, conveyed most perfectly the thoughts of Clemenceau in his telling of what they regard as the most powerful modern love story in the world; and these scenes, titled, will be the version of the only photodrama from the pen of the Tiger of France, that will be shown to the public."

"The Strongest" is declared by Fox officials to be the greatest work of R. A. Walsh. Its director Mr. Walsh, it is said, was given everything with which to make the picture a success—good cast, good sets, and liberal capital; and throwing into it his own directorial talents, he has produced for Fox Film Corporation the crowning efforts of his career, says the report from the Fox Film offices.

Commenting on the theme of "The Strongest," the Fox report continues: "It is a beautiful story of present-day life. Love in the opinion of Georges Clemenceau is the greatest force in the world. He holds that not armed power, not financial or diplomatic genius, not the mind but the heart, rules the world. Love is the greatest, the mightiest force of all; that is his conviction."

Carlo Liten, the Belgian actor is the dignified old Marquis, the dreamer. Harrison Hunter is the money-hungry, material Harley. In the prologue his wife is Florence Malone, who is probably best known for her work in Oliver Morosco's stage successes. Renee Adoree has the appealing role of Claudia, heroine of the story.

Belgian's screen star, Georgette Gauthier de Trigny, has the difficult role of the Comtesse. "In less capable hands," says the Fox report, "the strength of this part would be lost; but bringing to it all of her great experience and talent, Mlle. Gauthier de Trigny has made the Comtesse one of the most impressive villainesses of the screen.

"Jean Gauthier de Trigny came to the United States especially to portray the Visconte, and his work has indicated that William Fox made no mistake when he signed the French actor to a contract for the Clemenceau picture.

"James Marcus, Hal Horne, C. A. de Lima and Teddy Piper complete the cast. Ben Pail handled the camera and his work is said to be the best of his career. "The Strongest" by the mighty Clemenceau, produced by Fox Film Corporation under the direction of R. A. Walsh has all the earmarks of being one of the greatest sensations the screen has known," concludes the statement from the Fox offices.

"Madame X" Bought by Goldwyn

Story Will Be Given an Elaborate Production, Goldwyn Announces

"MADAME X," the French drama by Alexandre Bisson, has been purchased by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and will be given an elaborate production, it is said. In France, "Madame X" was played by the greatest French actresses of the day, both Mmes. Rejane and Sarah Bernhardt having appeared in the title role at different times. Mme. Bernhardt kept the play in her repertory when she toured America a few years ago. She not only gave the play in its entirety here, but also played the famous courtroom act in her numerous special vaudeville engagements.

The American adaptation of the play was made by John N. Raphael, and edited by William Henry Wright. Its premier in America took place at the New Amsterdam theatre in New York under the auspices of Henry W. Savage. Dorothy Donnelly played the part made famous in Paris by Sarah Bernhardt; and the young attorney, who unknowingly pleads the cause of his degraded mother, was interpreted by William Elliott. In the original American cast was L. Rogers Lytton, who has since become a well known film player.

"Madame X" was so successful that it played four years, and is still one of the stand-bys of all stock theatre companies. Miss Donnelly played the title role in New York and in Chicago during the first two years of its run; while Dorothy Dunlap headed a second company on the road. Two companies were put out during the third year and one in the fourth.

The play has met with such popular success on the stage that the Goldwyn officials believe its photoplay appeal will be tremendous. In the picture version, much of the past history of the famous "Madame X," which in the play is told in dialogue, can be revealed through graphic action.

"As yet, no director has been chosen for the production, nor has the cast been selected. But the Goldwyn company is making preparations to give 'Madame X' as complete and magnificent an interpretation as their huge facilities afford," say Goldwyn officials.

Vaudeville Team to Be Seen in Comedies

Accompanied by Gladys Clark and Henry Bergman, the vaudeville team of Clark and Bergman, who have forsaken the stage for the movies, Harry Cohn, of the firm of Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of Hall-Room Boys comedies, left for Los Angeles last week to supervise production.

Bessie Barriscale in "Woman and Wife," Robertson-Cole

Bessie Barriscale in a New Production

After a success in "Beckoning Roads," which was released during the holidays, Bessie Barriscale, the Robertson-Cole star, has just completed "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" which will be released in January. In this picture, the blonde star will achieve a new triumph, according to reports from her studios where everybody is enthusiastic over the new production. It is the first picture in which Miss Barriscale has been directed by Edward Sloman, who came to the B. B. Studios with an enviable record for artistic work.

"The Luck of Geraldine Laird" will mark the third of a series of Kathleen Norris stories which Miss Barriscale has been putting on the screen. It gives Miss Barriscale opportunity to offer a number of widely varying pictures of episodes in the life of Geraldine Laird, the leading character. Two of the chief ones show Mrs. Laird as a small town woman, greatly devoted to her two babies, and rather careless of her personal appearance; and later she goes to New York as a gloriously clad revue star, who, by a clever characterization on the stage, wins a wide following in the metropolis, where she is dined and feted.

Juanita Hansen Begins Work on Pathe Serial

Juanita Hansen began work this week on her first serial under the Pathe banner.

"The Mad Talon" is the working title of the serial. The story is by George B. Seitz, producer of mystery serials, and producer, director and star of "Bound and Gagged." Frank Leon Smith is writing the continuity, and the direction will be supervised by Mr. Seitz himself at the studio of George B. Seitz, Inc., Park avenue and 134th street, New York.

Big Racing Film Progresses

Vitagraph's "The Sporting Duchess" Contains Genuine Horse-Race Scenes

VITAGRAPH reports that the Alice Joyce Company, now engaged in the filming of "The Sporting Duchess" at New Orleans, is making rapid progress in the production of the picture. The company, twenty-one strong, arrived here the Sunday preceeding New Year's in charge of Frank Loomis, studio manager for Vitagraph, and George Terwilliger, who is directing Miss Joyce.

The first days were spent in the selection of locations, and the directors lost no time, according to reports, in getting the star and the other principals into action before the camera. On the opening day of the races, Mr. Terwilliger with two cameramen and Frank Bangs, studio photographer, worked on some actual racing scenes at the Fairgrounds. Miss Joyce and her director, after looking at the negative of the races, declared they were delighted with the results obtained.

The days following several big paddock scenes are reported to have been taken with several hundred "extras" appearing. Judging from the expense attaching to the horse-racing phase of the production, "The Sporting Duchess" probably will cost Vitagraph in the neighborhood of $250,000, it is stated by Vitagraph.

Percy Marmont is playing the lead, and G. V. Seyffertitz is the heavy. Others in the company here are Captain Pape, May McAvoy, Miss Edith Walker, and "Bill" Turner.

Enters Non-Theatrical Field

Republic Arranges to Distribute the Films of Community Picture Bureau

ANOTHER step forward in the progressive march of the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, is the announcement by Briton N. Busch, president, that Republic has entered the non-theatrical motion picture field by making an agreement with the Community Motion Picture Bureau whereby Republic will do the mechanical distribution for Community.

According to the arrangement, Community is to have a sales representative in each city where Republic has an office and all non-theatrical business now handled by Republic is to be turned over to Community. This will give Republic entre into the educational and industrial field as well as army posts, Y. M. C. A.'s, camps, etc.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau, which sprang into prominence during the war by the service they rendered the Goverment in supplying much needed entertainment for men in camps, are pioneers in non-theatrical business. Today they practically have control of all non-theatrical business, but have been more or less handicapped through lack of facilities to secure an adequate supply of the right type of pictures and a proper and efficient system of distribution.

At the present time it is impossible for Republic to supply Community with all of their pictures and it is the plan of the organization, besides acting as a distributing agent, to help secure them an adequate supply from other producers, it being understood that they will produce pictures through the affiliated Selznick Enterprises whenever it is possible.

In making this arrangement the main thought of Republic was the tremendous growth possible in the non-theatrical field and rather than open up direct competition with Community, Republic decided to join and with their assistance control their field.

Manhattan Life in Fox Film

George A. Beranger Is Directing "A Manhattan Knight" at College Point

"A MANHATTAN KNIGHT," adapted for the screen from the novel, "Find the Woman," by Gelett Burgess, is being photographed at the College Point studio of Fox Film Corporation under the direction of George A. Beranger. George Walsh, Fox star, is featured in the production, in which also appear Virginia Hammond, Pauline Garon and Louis R. Wolheim. The two last mentioned artists are doubling, working on the Fox production in the afternoon and on the Broadway stage at night. Miss Garon is playing in "Buddies" and Louis R. Wolheim is in "The Jest."

"A Manhattan Knight" is a mystery story. The upper strata of society and the underworld are said to be curiously mixed in this fast moving drama. Wild night life, poverty and wealth all have place in this interesting exposition of New York life, it is said.

According to the Fox report, there are some beautiful sets in "A Manhattan Knight," and Thomas O'Neil, technical expert of the Fox studio, has had a force of carpenters busy for some time constructing one of the cafe scenes which will show night life in the metropolis. "To make the scene realistic it was taken before the sixteenth of January," says the Fox statement.

John J. Foley, who recently finished work with Dell Henderson in "The Shark," is assistant director to Mr. Beranger. The photography is being handled by Charles Gilson.

Production Plans Stated by Character Pictures

Announcement is made by A. W. Plummer, of the newly-formed Character Pictures Corporation of the purchase of the motion picture rights to two popular novels. Arrangements have been made whereby Character Pictures will produce "The Frameup," by Edward Everett Mathews, and "The Stampede," by Mack Arthur. Both of these works are both rugged outdoor stories, and are said to lend themselves admirably to the type of production which is planned by the company.

"Both 'The Frameup' and 'The Stampede' will be special all-star productions," announces the Character Pictures Corporation. "Extreme care will be taken in the selection of the cast and director. They are scheduled for early production, and full details and announcements will be made regarding them in a few days."

"Servant" Film Strikes New Note

THE production of "Who's Your Servant?" the photo-play which is described as a greater picture than "The Cheat" is the first step in a determined movement for the creation of motion pictures of a different type, according to L. L. Hiller, who controls the world's rights. Mr. Hiller in making the statement revealed the fact that the author of the play is Julian Johnson, the well-known editor and motion picture critic.

Realizing the intense sameness of the great majority of picture plays, Mr. Johnson determined after conferring with several leading producers to write something entirely unique.

The eternal triangle, or the husband or wife seemed to be the center of practically every motion picture drama, according to Mr. Johnson's careful investigation, and he finally decided that a hitherto neglected element of the household, and still a most important factor, the servant was the proper character on which to center the first effort in variation.

Fully decided in his determination to make the humble servant the theme of his story Mr. Johnson was astounded in his research work to find the real importance of the servant in the home. He was struck by the importance of the servant in history. In every great crisis of nations a servant figured somewhere. All the intrigues and spying of European courts before the war was the work of the servants.

All the intensity of the importance of the stranger within the home is brought out in the picture and that unusual angle combined with a well-woven story written in Mr. Johnson's best style has resulted in compliments from many noted producers. Those who were privileged to see the first screening were united in declaring that it would be one of the sensations of the industry.

Author of "Who's Your Servant?" Searched Long for Theme

The result of this expression of opinion was a decision to put the picture out with every accessory of a super-special and the backers are confident it will be greeted as such. A nation-wide trade paper advertising campaign has been inaugurated and will be strongly carried on until after the Broadway premiere of the production.

Thousands of merchants throughout the country have been enlisted in the exploitation campaign. They will be furnished with paper bags in which to send out groceries, meats, and other articles that reach the home and the query "Who's Your Servant?" will be printed on the bags and wrapping paper. This particular exploitation aid will cost thousands of dollars but is expected to create something of a sensation throughout the country.

In addition to these features a press book of more than twenty pages has been prepared in three colors. Trailers, slides, heralds, and many other aids to effective exploitation of the picture have also been prepared.

Jewish Press Advanced as Field for Picture Ads

By Arthur L. Malkenson

Jewish Morning Journal

THE motion picture producing industry is known for its marvelous efficiency. If one is to judge by the way the motion picture is distributed throughout the world, one cannot but marvel at the thoroughness with which the industry has gone about its task.

I feel certain that although that now famous place known as the Island of Yap was only recently discovered by our professional diplomats, the diplomats of the motion picture world had it on their maps long ago, for their rule seems to be that wherever there are people with eyes to see and hearts to feel, they are going to show them pictures.

It is safe to say that of the four million Jews living in this country, not less than two-thirds of them speak Yiddish, and not less than one-half of them use it exclusively in their daily intercourse.

These two million people get all their news and cultural nourishment from the great reservoir of Jewish life concentrated in the City of New York, namely, the Yiddish daily press.

It is, of course, obvious that in a Yiddish speaking family, the head of the family would certainly be a Yiddish newspaper reader. If he could be influenced to go to the movies or to see a particular picture, he in turn would exercise his influence in the choice of the picture to be seen by the rest of the family. Estimating the average Jewish family to consist of five members, it can readily be seen how completely the Yiddish newspapers would serve the purpose of the moving picture producers advertising campaign.

The same reason which induced the enterprising motion picture producers of the country to advertise their productions in national media of publicity, should also operate with respect to our Yiddish speaking population. The same psychological appeal intended to convince the millions of Americans of the value of motion pictures of the better sort can be made with equal success to the two million Jews. The same taste for movies can be developed among these people as among their native neighbors.

New York has the largest population of any city in the world, and the Jewish sections of New York have more neighborhood moving picture theatres than any other sections of the country. The vast majority of the exhibitors in and around New York are Jews, most of them readers of Jewish newspapers. Here alone is a vast opportunity to educate literally hundreds of thousands to appreciate and demand from their neighborhod exhibitors the types of pictures they see advertised in their own languages.

The Yiddish dailies of New York are great national media. This has been realized by a good many large national advertisers. It may surprise some of the movie magnates to learn that the proportion of national to local business carried by the New York Yiddish papers is greater than in the vernacular press. Yet this is a fact.

I would therefore submit to the motion picture producing industry this query: "Why neglect the Yiddish field?"

These are "dog days" in the pictures. Here is Wm. Parke, director of Pauline Frederick in "The Paliser Case," with his dog "Bobbie"

Chaplin Reissue Said to Be a Success

Saving the photoplay all by itself? No—by force of example! " BLIND HUSBANDS " has jolted every writer and director of photoplays into a new line of thought—has started an epoch whose pictures will be at least as " grown up " as the intelligent men and women who pay to see them.

In a bare eight weeks, "BLIND HUSBANDS" has lifted the photodrama out of the Rollo-book class and put it into long trousers—has killed off the impossible " vamp "—has sent sweet-and-sticky sentimentalism back to the kindergarten.

Just exactly as Jack London pumped new, red life-blood into the American novel and started our literature on a brand-new tack, so Von Stroheim's " BLIND HUSBANDS " is giving the American photoplay a new lease of life—making your theatre a more valuable investment. January Christie Comic Features Cannibal

A cannibal in polite society is the theme of the latest Christie Special comedy, which will be released through Independent Exchanges early this month by the Christie Film Company. The picture features Eddie Barry in the role of the cannibal, the title being "Save Me Sadie."

Included in the cast of this new feature comedy are: Eddie Barry, as the cannibal; Helen Darling, a maid with missionary leanings; Earl Rodney, who wants her to have him exclusively by marrying him; Gene Corey, an accomplice, who introduced the redskin from Timbuctoo to polite society; Ward Caulfield, as the father; Fay Lemporte, a girl chum who loves a cannibal; and Jack Henderson, a much abused butler.

Taylor Holmes' Picture Has Unusual Settings

Several of the scenes in Taylor Holmes's first independent production, "Nothing But The Truth," which is a current release by Metro Pictures Corporation, is said by Metro to embody some unusual scenes of magnificence and luxury.

One of the principal scenes is in the hall of a Long Island country house. Genuine Gobelin tapestries, which tell the story of a medieval hunt, done in rich weaving and design, are a particular feature of this set. Louis Quinze chairs and a table are also placed in artistic arrangement about the hall, together with a rosewood grand piano and great Ming vases.

Interesting Matter in Universal Magazine

Several interesting subjects are contained in number 50 of the New Screen Magazine, including pictures of Soda Lake, California, one of the wonders of the world, a mineral garden showing how the combination of various salts dissolved in water will grow immediately into a miniature mammoth Cave, "The Great Radium Robbery," a satire in mud, Dr. Angell's games for young folks, and a series of letter laughs.

Expects 1920 To Be Record Year

So States Harry Berman, Gen'l Mgr. for Universal Exchanges

In a statement just issued by Harry Berman, general manager of the Universal Exchanges, that official expresses some conclusions which he has reached as the result of the nationwide tour of inspection which he has just completed. The statement follows:

"We are about to experience the biggest business we ever knew of," says Berman. "A good part of the money turned loose by the enforcement of prohibition regulations is going to find its place in the pockets of exhibitors. The country is tired of the excitement of the war. People are frequenting cabarets less and less each day. Evenings are being spent in quieter and saner places. The moving picture theatre has, in truth, come into its own.

"The growing excellence and lavishness of photoplay-productions is gradually educating and refining the people's taste as to what they may expect on the screen. They are now demanding higher class productions all the time. They know they cost more to produce, and they are willing to pay higher prices to see them. The year 1920 will see the screening of the finest photoplays ever produced.

"The moving picture theatres are keeping pace with the increasing quality in screen productions. New York cannot boast of any better playhouses than any other section of the country. With the exception of the Capitol, the West has theatres which rival any of New York's best. The West is not standing still.

"Is New York the criterion of the success of a picture? Absolutely no! The other key cities stamp a picture a success or a failure in their respective territories regardless of whatever New York's verdict may be. It is nice to say, of course, that this or that picture played at the Capitol or the Rivoli or any other eminent house of the big city, but this means nothing to the exhibitor out West or down South. He depends on the verdict of his key city.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of Universal Exchanges

"Will the percentage method of booking pictures become an actuality? I think not, altho I am personally in favor of it and think the film-business should be conducted along this line. Exhibitors are making too much money by buying pictures outright, to be interested in changing their methods. The majority of successful exhibitors avoid reference to this subject altogether. There are enough good pictures on the market on which they can be sure of their profits, and they do not care to enter into a plan whereby they would have to split their earnings in any way. Percentage may come eventually, but the exhibitors are certainly going to fight against it.

"A point which augurs well for the future of the industry is that all producers are given the same reception by the exhibitors. The exhibitor wants good pictures, and he doesn't care who makes them. If they are good he will book them. This is a healthy spot in the moving picture business. It allows for real competition, and competition spurs producers to better efforts.

"After looking over the whole country I can sum up my trip in one sentence:

"Universal expects to do the biggest business of its career, with the highest quality pictures it has ever produced, in 1920."

"Blanche Sweet Has Come Back"

Declares Pathe in a Statement Issued About Actress

A REPORT from the Pathe Exchange deals with considerable detail on what is described as the "sensational come-back" of Blanche Sweet in her recent Pathe releases. The report follows in part:

"In the recent annals of motion pictures, there is no brighter chapter than the sensational 'come-back' of Blanche Sweet, who in a short space of time has again become one of the screen's dominating personalities, and biggest box office attractions. Under the production guidance of Jesse D. Hampton, and the powerful selling influence of the Pathe feature department, Miss Sweet has regained the lofty position she held when she retired temporarily from screen activities.

"Her success in 'A Woman of Pleasure,' first of the Hampton-Sweet series for Pathe distribution, was significant of the esteem in which the young star is regarded by the theatre-going public. No picture on the Pathe list during 1919, enjoyed a more substantial career than 'A Woman of Pleasure,' which is yet one of the biggest productions booking through Pathe.

"More recently there has been 'Fighting Cressy,' which after a highly successful run at the Broadway theatre, New York, has virtually taken the county by storm. Released only on January 11, the bookings on 'Fighting Cressy,' which was adapted from Bret Harte's classic of the West, 'Cressy,' is selling at a pace more rapid than any picture in which she has ever appeared. 'Fighting Cressy' could not fail, for it possesses all the elements essential for a box office triumph.

"Now, for the third of her series of Hampton specials for Pathe, Miss Sweet is appearing in 'The Deadlier Sex,' which, without the stint of press-agentry, undoubtedly will be the supreme achievement of her screen career.

"When he first signed Blanche Sweet, Jesse D. Hampton promised Pathe and exhibitors that he would star her in only the strongest vehicles, written by authors of national and international repute. He has fulfilled this promise in every respect. 'A Woman of Pleasure' was one of the most famous melodramas ever produced in England. Written by James Willard, known equally as well in the United States as in England, this play was one of the biggest money makers ever seen in Britain. To obtain the film rights Mr. Hampton had to invest a sum that few of the biggest photoplays cost to produce in their entirety.

"In selecting 'Cressy,' as the second of the Sweet series of stories, Mr. Hampton could not have picked the work of a more successful author than Bret Harte.

"Harte's works are known and beloved by every American who has ever enjoyed red-blooded, thrilling, entertaining stories. His stories of the West when it was really the West, will never die. In making the production, Mr. Hampton retained all the naive appeal of the West's greatest delineator and in addition gave to exhibitors a name that meant money in their box office.

"About the third picture, 'The Deadlier Sex,' it must be said that Mr. Veiller is shown up in a new light as an author. His efforts with 'Within the Law,' and 'The Thirteenth Chair' were all strictly dramatic. In 'The Deadlier Sex,' Mr. Veiller contributes a story that is delightfully humorous. Possessing a goodly amount of dramatic incident, but rampant with a clean, delightful light vein that no one can resist."

Laudatory Telegrams on "In Old Kentucky"

Anita Stewart's production, "In Old Kentucky," is reported to have established box-office records in St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and Cleveland last week. "In Old Kentucky" pleased the audiences so much, it is stated, that the managements in some cases were induced to hold the picture over for an extended run.

Mr. J. F. Cubberley, First National Manager at Minneapolis, sent the following wire to the Anita Stewart Productions, New York City:

"Total net business last week Minneapolis Eleven Thousand Four Hundred Eighteen Dollars Sixty Cents beating every picture regardless of admission ever shown in Minneapolis. Total net business St. Paul Eight Thousand Eight hundred Thirty-four dollars five cents which also beats everything ever shown in St. Paul."

Mr. W. E. Lusk, First National Manager at Cleveland, wired the following:

"Kentucky closed Saturday night Metropolitan Orpheum Strand after having broken records for three houses in spite of terrific cold and blizzard last two days."

Hobart Henley Ventures Prediction for 1920

In a statement recently issued from the Pathe office, Hobart Henley, while asserting his dislike for the practice of producers to begin each year by promising to outshine all their past efforts, ventures a prophecy for 1920, because as he puts it, "capitalists instead of trying to direct and supervise a production, as heretofore, are now willing to loan their money, and leave the systematizing and producing to those men who spend their lives trying to perfect productions, with the result that there is more system, less waste and the output is bigger and better.

"In view of these facts, it is impossible to have anything but a higher type production. And I believe that 1920 will show a greater progress, both in the producing field and the exhibitor's end of the game, than any previous year."

Picture Star to Appear on Stage in Revue

An announcement from the Theatrical Pictures Corporation, Inc., reports that Hopp Hadley, the originator of the "Movical" comedy, the first of which, "The Wizard of Oz" and "Movie Girls Revue," is now playing at the Trent Theatre in Trenton, N. J., has arranged with Frank F. Moore, star of the "Wizard of Oz" picture, to star in the Revue in connection with the picture.

Wm. Seitor to be Made Director-General

As soon as William A. Seiter finishes his current feature production, "The Kentucky Colonel," for the National Film Corporation of America, he will be appointed to the newly-created position of director-general for that concern, according to advices from the West Coast Studios of the National.

George B. Seitz, of "Pirate Gold" fame, released by Pathe, was presented by his company with a gold cigarette case recently. This is what happened just after the presentation speech

Pathe Plans Special Display

Will Distribute a Special One-Sheet On Films of "Extra-Special" Calibre

PATHE states that its exploitation policy will take another step forward shortly when a novelty in the way of one-sheets will be introduced to exhibitors. Beginning with the release of "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis' first production for Pathe distribution, which is set for release on February 1, Pathe will issue an additional rotogravure one-sheet on each of its extra special offerings.

This poster will contain punch scenes from the picture, with a sales talk, directed for public consumption. It will be artistically produced, according to reports, so that it can take the place of ineffective lobby displays, and will make a remarkable window display in addition, it is stated by Pathe officials. The special one-sheet will be issued in addition to the customary line of lithographs.

"It is the Pathe policy to keep in the closest touch with all of its patrons," announces the statement from Pathe Exchange, "and it was in feeling the sentiments of exhibitors that the special one-sheet idea was born. Many exhibitors have been suggesting such an arrangement, but owing to the cost, Pathe was obliged to get the sentiments of a large portion of its patrons before embarking on its novel plan.

"These posters will be issued only on extra specials in which class of Pathe releases will be found attractions of the merit of 'Of Boy,' 'The Thirteenth Chair,' 'A Woman of Pleasure,' 'Fighting Cressy,' 'The Gay Old Dog,' 'The Right to Lie,' 'The World Aflame' and 'Other Men's Shoes.' The captions for these one-sheets will be written by men of proven showmanship capacity."

Hollywood Going Full-Blast

Seven Companies at Work on Coming Releases Keep Studios Very Active

ACCORDING to a report from the Famous Players, the busy season has really set in for the Lasky studio at Hollywood, and with seven companies at work the big stages are said to be crowded with sets and players, cameramen, stage carpenters and property men.

The productions now in work are: "The Fighting Chance," a Paramount Artcraft Special directed by Charles Maigne, with Conrad Nagle and Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading roles; "The Prince Chap," Edward Peple's charming play of English life, a romantic comedy-drama which is being produced as a special by William DeMille and with Thomas Meighan in the title-role and Lila Lee, Kathlyn Williams and others in the chief support; "The Round-Up," starring Roscoe Arbuckle as the fat sheriff, "Slim Hoover," a George Melford production, with scenario by Tom Forman, who also has an important role in the picture, and Mabel Juliene Scott as the leading woman; and "The Dancin' Fool," directed by Sam Wood, starring Wallace Reid, with Bebe Daniels as leading woman.

Work is also progressing on "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," starring Bryant Washburn, directed by James Cruze, with Wanda Hawley as leading woman, and Carmen Phillips and Walter Hiers prominent in the cast; "Thou Art the Man!" directed by Thomas Hoffron, starring Robert Warwick, from the book, "Myles Calthorpe, I. D. B.," by F. E. Mills Young; and "A Lady in Love," starring Ethel Clayton.

Picture Production is Costly in Shanghai

According to a report received from Universal, a recent letter from the correspondent of the Marie Walcamp party, now filming a serial in the Far East, describes the monetary exchange, prevailing in Shanghai, China, as not at all conducive to the production of pictures on that location. The letter reads: "The exchange here is very high today, being eighty-eight cents on the dollar, so you see that it would be terribly expensive to keep the company in Shanghai for very long. Mr. McRae is trying to exhaust this territory as rapidly as possible.

The correspondent also comments on the great amount of publicity the foreign newspapers are giving the party. Mr. McRae, the director, is reported to be getting some very unusual shots of restricted areas.

Blackton and Hampton Films Seen by Trade

More than two score of the leading Indiana exhibitors gathered in the showroom of Pathe's Indianapolis exchange recently and saw the screening of "My Husband's Other Wife," and "The Prince and Betty." The former is the third of J. Stuart Blackton's series of Pathe productions, while William Desmond is starred in "The Prince and Betty," made by Jesse D. Hampton.

Many of the exhibitors are said to have asserted that "My Husband's Other Wife" was the best feature released in six months. Bookings on the Blackton picture have been extremely heavy on the strength of the trade showing, according to reports from the Pathe office.

Zukor Congratulated by Moss on Ince Feature

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation reports that Adolph Zukor, president of the Corporation, was the recipient of a recent letter from B. S. Moss, the New York theatrical magnate, in which Mr. Moss expressed his congratulations and heaped considerable praise on the Thomas H. Ince production, "Behind the Door," which has had a week's run at Moss's Broadway house. Among his other remarks on the success of the attraction, Mr. Moss is reported to have stated: "I doubt whether any screen melodrama has ever been made which has been packed with such a terrific power and such heart-stirring action."

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" Picture Completed

According to reports from Famous Players, Director John S. Robertson has finished the filming of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which was adapted by Clara Beranger from Stevenson's tale of dual personality. John Barrymore is the star. Martha Mansfield is Mr. Barrymore's leading woman. Other members of the cast include Brandon Hurst, J. Malcolm Dunn, Cecil Clovelly, Charles Lane, George Stevens and Nita Naldo.

Paramount-Artcraft promises the picture of the year in "The Copperhead" in which Lionel Barrymore has the leading role and which is soon to be released

Neilan Ably Assisted in His Work

In the picturization of "The River's End." Marshall Neilan's initial attraction for First National as an independent producer, the following assistants are mentioned as lending valuable aid in the production of the forthcoming feature. Victor Heernan is directing various scenes under Mr. Neilan's supervision. Marion Fairfax has adapted the book for screen presentation. Howard M. Ewing, said to be the inventor of many effects in motion-picture lighting, is supervising the electrical features, and some novel effects are promised. Other members of the producing staff are Ben Carre, as art director; Henry Cronjager and Sam Landers, camera experts; Tom Held and H. I. Peyton, assistant directors.

Lewis Stone, in a dual role, is called upon to exert his best histrionic ability, and other characters, such as those played by Marjorie Daw, Jane Novak and Yami Mata, are given exceptional parts.

Hart Leases Property for Next Picture

In order to provide sufficient space for the erection of exterior settings and other purposes in connection with his next picture for Paramount-Artcraft, Wiliam S. Hart has leased 150 acres of ground in the Hollywood foothills, it is stated. On this location he will be able to make all necessary arrangements for the settings which cannot be found on regular locations elsewhere or which cannot be accommodated in the confines of the smaller ranch of sixteen acres already owned by the star.

Dorothy Dalton Begins on "Half an Hour"

Dorothy Dalton, who recently changed her affiliation from Thomas H. Ince to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has commenced work on "Half an Hour," her first picture under the terms of her new contract. Harley Knoles has been selected to direct Miss Dalton. Other members of the cast include: Charles Richman, Frank Losee, Albert Barrett, and Cooper Cliffe.

F. P. Lasky Plans Big Campaign

"The Copperhead" Will Get Wide Space in Periodicals

WHAT Famous Players-Lasky states is "by far the biggest campaign of national advertising ever launched in behalf of a single picture" is that which is about to be started for "The Copperhead," the Paramount Artcraft Super-Special featuring Lionel Barrymore which is to be released January 25.

"No less than thirty-one publications," says the report from the Famous Players offices, "circulating to a country-wide clientele, within the next four weeks will carry full-page advertisements of 'The Copperhead,' the total circulation gained being approximately 10,000,000. The list has been carefully selected with a view to reaching the most cultured and substantial people of the country, people who will be attracted by 'The Copperhead's' historical and patriotic appeal. Thirteen education and teachers' magazines are included, as is the American Legion Magazine, which reaches a large percentage of the men who served under the Stars and Stripes in the recent war.

"The complete list of publications carrying 'The Copperhead' announcement follows: Atlantic Monthly, February; Century, February; Everybody's, March; Harpers, February; Hearst's, February; Home Sector, January 24; Literary Digest, January 17; Metropolitan, February; Munsey's, February; National Geographic, February; Outlook, January 28; Review of Reviews, February; Saturday Evening Post, February 7; Scribner's, February; World's Work, February; Collier's, January 31; Christian Herald, January 24; American Legion, January 23; American Education, January 10; American School, January 12; American School Board Journal, February 1; Educational Foundations, February; Journal of Education, January 22; Kindergarten and First Grade, February; Normal Instructor and Primary Plans, February; Ohio Teacher, January 16; Popular Educator, February; Primary Education, February; Progressive Teacher, February; School Century, February, and School News, February.

"George Fitzmaurice's production, 'On With the Dance,' will be advertised in the February 21 issue of the Saturday Evening Post and in Country Gentleman, out the middle of February. 'Why Change Your Wife?' will be spread before the readers of the Saturday Evening Post and Collier's of March 20 and Ladies' Home Journal of March. A full page on 'Huckleberry Finn' will be run in Christian Herald for February and in Lone Scout, St. Nicholas, Boys' Life, American Boy and Boys' Magazine.

"A page on 'Behind the Door' runs in February McClure's, in which publication the story first appeared. Similarly, Metropolitan, which carried the story of 'A Girl Named Mary,' carries a page on the picture, and 'The Six Best Cellars' will be advertised in McClure's which ran the story last July.

"These are but a few scattering examples," says Famous Players, "which give you some idea of the magnitude of this big campaign of production-advertising in the national publications. In addition, specialized advertising is also being carried in the "fan" publications; such as Photoplay, Picture Play, Motion Picture Magazine, Theatre, Motion Picture Classic, Photoplay World, Photoplay Journal, Shadowland and Vanity Fair."

New Blackton Film Finished

Fourth of Pathe Releases Is Listed for February 15; Breamer-Gordon Co-Stars

WHILE "My Husband's Other Wife" is achieving success, according to reports, in every section of the country, J. Stuart Blackton announces that the fourth of his series for distribution by Pathe has been completed in his Brooklyn studio. "Respectable by Proxy" is its title, and it is listed for release on February 15, six weeks after "My Husband's Other Wife" will have made its debut. Six reels are devoted to the relating of the story, which for human appeal, action and love interest has never been surpassed by any Blackton production, it is stated.

Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are again co-starred. The story was written by Florence Myott and was adapted to the screen by Stanley Olmsted. Mr. Blackton has surrounded his stars with a good cast, which is headed by William Dunn and Eulalie Jensen. Miss Jensen, of the stately type, is said to be a striking contrast to Miss Breamer. Dunn is a polished villain, whose nefarious work has brought him to many a bad ending on the screen.

"The story of 'Respectable by Proxy' is one that, while rich in character drawing, has an abundance of action and suspense. It is produced with the lavishness of all Blackton pictures; and, while the director makes no claim to any unusual honors, the garden scenes shot at night are achievements of rarest technical beauty," claims the report issued by Pathe on this new Blackton production.

Due for Jan. Release

Four new Gayety comedies are released this month through independent exchanges. Three of the comedies feature George Ovey, with Lillian Biron and the Gayety Girls; and one features William Bletcher and Vera Reynolds.

"Ladies Must Dance" introduces George Ovey as an amateur dancing master. The comedy was directed by James Clemens. Craig Hutchinson directed the next two Gayety Comedies, "Bounced," with George Ovey and Lillian Biron; and "A Saphead's Sacrifice," with Bletcher and Vera Reynolds. Clemens directed the fourth January release, which is entitled "Ruined by Love," featuring Ovey, with Miss Biron.

"Jubilo" Song Goes Well with Role of Rogers

According to a statement issued by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, reports from numerous theatres where Will Rogers in his latest Goldwyn release, "Jubilo," has been the attraction, have invariably referred to the appropriateness of the "Jubilo" sang, which has been the main theme of the musical accompaniment. It suits the story and the personality of the happy-go-lucky tramp portrayed by Rogers, says the Goldwyn announcement. The song was written by Jerome Kern and published by T. B. Harms, Francis Day and Hunter, publishers of much of the music for musical comedies.

Screen Lures Another Veteran Journalist

An announcement just received states that Louis Weadock and Thomas Geraghty were the actual authors of Douglas Fairbanks' latest success, "When the Clouds Roll By." Mr. Weadock, it is stated, has been signed up by the Fairbanks scenario forces. Both these men are reported to be veteran newspaper-men. Mr. Geraghty is said to be responsible for most of the Douglas Fairbanks productions for the last two years. "When the Clouds Roll By" is taken as an indication of Mr. Weadock's happy qualifications for future work of this sort on the Fairbanks' scenario staff.

Edward Connelly Plays in Separate Pictures

Edward Connelly will play Eliza's father in "Eliza Comes to Stay," Viola Dana's new Screen Classic picture. He is playing also at "Nat" Berry in "Shore Acres," in which Alice Lake is featured. As his appearances in both productions are limited to only certain phases of the action, the parts do not conflict.

Anne Luther, star of "Why Women Sin," a Burton King production for Wistaria pictures

Laemmle Finds Studio Active

Universal Head Returns from the Coast and Denies Talk of Any Work Let Down

"UNIVERSAL CITY is going ahead at full steam," said Carl Laemmle when questioned after he had stepped off the train from the coast. He was very enthusiastic over the prospects of the new year, and spoke of extending his company's activities. His flying tour of inspection of the Universal studios made him very optimistic in so far as production progress is concerned. He found the big film city bustling with activity despite the fact that the holiday season was in full swing.

"Contrary to certain unfounded reports," said Mr. Laemmle, "Universal City has more people on their payroll at the present time than any other individual film company in California. If that sounds as if Universal is slacking up, well then you know more than I do about my own organization.

"When I was ~~out~~ there I found the whole place working at high efficiency. Everything was being done to keep things going fast and big. Every department was working at full pressure to keep up with the unprecedented growth in business.

"As an indication of what we are doing, I found three serial companies working, one company turning out Jewel pictures and no less than six companies producing our special attractions. This is in addition to the numerous companies turning out the usual number of Universal comedies, westerns, and other short-reel subjects.

"If this sounds like laying down on the job, then it means that other companies have no job to lay down on. If anybody thinks that Universal is going to rest on what it has done—well, that person can go right ahead thinking as he pleases. All I can say is, WATCH UNIVERSAL. We're so far ahead of our competitors now, both in quality and quantity of production, that all this talk means nothing to us."

Hampton Talks on Star-Casts

All-Star Casts Put Responsibility of Picture Squarely Up to Director

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON declares that the work and responsibility of the producer of an all-star production of genuine calibre are far heavier than that of any other, on the speaking stage or in moving pictures.

"All-star pictures are produced along lines of dramatic construction that demand a solution from the producer and director of each problem as it arises. There is no alibi," said the producer. "In old style motion pictures, a knotty problem of dramatic construction could always be solved by inserting a closeup of the star. If that did not bring the desired results, the director could always blame the star.

"Another alibi that cannot be used is difficulty of handling the supporting cast. When the cast is composed entirely of celebrated screen artists, who are eminently qualified to portray their roles, it is the director's fault, if he cannot paint his picture and play his drama with them, for they are perfect working material. In the older type of picture, there were as many excuses for poor work as there were scenes and characters in the play. On the other hand these all-star pictures of 'The Sagebrusher' calibre give one unlimited working facilities, no handicap, and absolutely no excuses for unsatisfactory results.

"A director who is bluffing his way through, inexperienced or ignorant of dramatic principles, will never be able to get far with blg all-star productions.

Simplex Notes

Featured by many new dancing no elties and wonderful music, the b given to the motion picture trade this part of the territory by the Te Products Mfg. Company and Simpl was a great success.

The dance was held in the Go Room of the Radisson Hotel, Minnea olis, and was attended by nearly ever one connected with the film industr in the Twin Cities and many fro outside.

The dance hall proper and adjoinin lounging rooms were hardly larg enough to take care of the enormou number of persons that responded t the invitation sent by Mr. Feinberg.

Nearly five hundred exchange mem bers, salesmen and exhibitors spen five hours dancing to the strains o some wonderful music. The sponsor were determined to make this a mem orable event, and beyond all questio succeeded.

Two orchestras were used to insur the dancers that they could dance a long as they cared, which was quit late.

The programs were very neatly an cleverly arranged, each film compan being honored by having a danc named for it. The "Teco One-Step," "William Fox-Trot," "Goldwyn Glide," "Metro Moonlight," "Realart Rag," "Select Shimmy," "Paramount Waltz," "Simplex Projection," "Amusement Blues," "Pathe Patter," all vied with each other for the greatest number of encores. The extra dance numbers were appropriately named after the largest Minneapolis theatres.

Refreshments of a very palatable nature were served throughout the entire course of festivities. Smokes galore—everything was just like anything you could wish for any time—any place.

Charles Perry, manager of the Minneapolis Strand theatre, was judged the winner of the prize waltz contest by Messrs. Cubberley, Stombaugh, Margoles, Feldman and other notables, and was very much surprised when given the prize.

Enclosed in a box was a brand new dime, a regular U. S. ten-cent piece and one brightly shining little pin—which was offered as the prize—a dime an' pin. The surprise was not only for the winning dancers, but for all present—and it went over beaufifully.

The lighting effects given the dances were brought about by a machine throwing different colored lights on the floor, making the dancing couples doubly attractive.

The crowd was merry and every person got 100 per cent. enjoyment for the evening spent. Manager Feinberg of the Teco Products Mfg. Company was warmly congratulated for the manner in which he arranged and tendered the reception.

'Twas certainly an evening for the "film hounds," to return after many months on the road and find such an evening's entertainment waiting for them to take part in. Everyone had fun, some more than others, but "a good time was had by all." We are now patiently going to stand by and wait until Mr. Feinberg gives the second annual Teco-Simplex ball in December, 1920.

Translated to the screen this rare and beautiful story becomes even more charming and entertaing than it's popular stage production. The story is of special interest to women, telling in a highly dramatic & original way of a girl's sacrifice for the man she loves.

First of Authors' Series Filmed

Pictures of This Group to Be Made with Authors' Cooperation

ACCORDING to a report from the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation on the "Cup of Fury," although this picture has been seen only at special showings, prior to its release by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as the first Eminent Authors production, Rupert Huges, the author, is said to have already received a quantity of letters complimenting him on the wonderful drama made from his story.

Particular interest centers in this Eminent Authors' picturization in that it marks the test of a new policy through which the author becomes an important factor in actually bringing his work to the screen. Goldwyn officials assert that "The Cup of Fury," soon to be followed by other Eminent Authors Pictures, produced with the active cooperation of the writers of the original stories, proves the wisdom of the plain said to have been conceived and carried out by Samuel Goldwyn and Rex eBach, president of the Eminent Authors. After seeing "The Cup of Fury," Mr. Beach sent the following letter to Mr. Hughes:

"I have seen 'The Cup of Fury,' and it is a great picture. Permit me to compliment you upon achieving such a splendid result with your first Eminent Authors production.

"In 'The Cup of Fury' you have accomplished the end Mr. Goldwyn and I had in mind in organizing the Eminent Authors Pictures Co., viz.: you have told a great story upon the screen with the same force, the same directness, the same artistry that marks your writings.

"We contend that the screen needs and will welcome great stories, famous plays told in the language of their creators. And 'The Cup of Fury' is a great, a significant story for, aside from its clean, strong love interest and swift, absorbing action, it deals with perhaps the most vital problem of our national life, the relation of Capital and Labor.

"It is not a war story but a story of conditions arising from the war. Above all it is timely. It is a story of today, a story of American determination to overcome odds and accomplish the impossible. Technical detail, cast and direction are splendid, and I feel sure it will meet with a tremendous popular response."

Chicago Backs National Theatres

Selznick Announces Every Big Circuit Has Joined

UPON the return of Lewis J. Selpnick last week from Chicago and points in the Middle West, it was learned that for the first time in Chicago film history the big competing companies operating circuits of theatres have pledged their united support to one enterprise. This organization is National Picture Theatres, Inc., and the man round whom the circuits have rallied is Lewis J. Selznick, head of the organization.

Mr. Selznick was very enthusiastic in his statement that National Picture Theatres, Inc., is the future great motion picture company of the United States in which one to ten thousand exhibitors will cooperate for the profit and protection of all.

Several months ago Nathan Ascher not only caused all his theatres to become members of National Picture Theatres, Inc., but also became National's first exhibitor Vice-President and Director. He later arranged a meeting of the heads of every big Chicago circuit. As a result of this meeting the theatres of Lubliner and Trinz, Balaban & Katz; Jones, Linick & Schafer; Andrew Karzas and Ascher Bros. have already signed membership contracts in National.

These circuits, together with their allied interests, control the one hundred most important theatres in Chicago, and now that they have gone into partnership with Mr. Selznick, National is henceforth of supreme importance in the city of Chicago.

"They say exhibitors will not stick together," continued Mr. Selznick. "That is all wrong. Exhibitors in the face of the present dangers are cooperating in a way that is wonderful.

"Take the case of the big Chicago exhibitors. Nathan Ascher owned a National franchise and a directorate which he considered worth a fortune. Yet he voluntarily shared what he had to enable other exhibitors to come in and these other exhibitors met him more than half way.

"In Select I have built an exchange organization which gives the exhibitors splendid service and which makes profits. My studios have always made pictures which make money for exhibitors. All these resources are at the service of exhibitors all over the world who wish to join National and share in the profits. That exhibitors appreciate real co-operation when it is offered is proven by the fact that every day National's membership increases by leaps and bounds.

"I have just received a wire from California that National's first picture—'Just a Wife'—is a knockout. The second picture—'Blind Youth'—is almost completed and should be equally great.

"If any picture is not excellent I will not release it through National.

"In February the twenty-six exhibitor directors—one from each exchange zone—will meet and decide on future pictures. I will give them the kind of pictures they want—as many or as few as they wish. National members must be pleased.

Pathe Makes Big Claims for Edgar Lewis Production, First of His New Series

WITH a long record of screen successes to his credit, Edgar Lewis, one of America's greatest motion picture producers, returns to the center of the stage again on February 1, when Pathe will release his seven-part production, "Other Men's Shoes." This adaptation of Andrew Soutar's novel is the first of a series of big, red-blooded screen dramas that Lewis will make during the coming year for distribution by Pathe.

Year after year Mr. Lewis has given to the trade, a picture that has stood out as among the biggest of the perod. His "Other Men's Shoes" is said to be another production calculated to win even greater triumph for the director and producer. To begin with, it will have the powerful distributing organization of Pathe back of it. But regardless of that, it is said to possess every attribute a motion picture must have today to be a big box office attraction.

Cranford Kent is being featured in "Other Men's Shoes." Andrew Soutar, author, is another valuable asset to "Other Men's Shoes." He was one of the best known American correspondents on the Russian front during the great war.

Mr. Lewis has produced the Soutar story with all his finesse. More than four thousand persons were employed in the production, yet it runs smoothly throughout. The producer has surrounded his lead with a highly competent cast, which includes Irene Boyle, Stephen Gratton, Jean Armour, Harold Forshay, John P. Wade, Phil Sanford, and little Bobby Connelly, one of the cleverest child actors on the screen.

Pathe has issued a campaign book on "Other Men's Shoes" that it believes cannot fail to help any exhibitor put over the picture in glowing fashion. It offers many exploitation and advertising ideas, commensurate with the size of the picture.

"Safety First" Film Lesson

6000 Children See Universal Industrial; Secretary Baker Addresses Them

SECRETARY of War Baker addressed six thousand children from the public schools of Manhattan at the Capitol theatre, New York, on January 10 and thanked them in behalf of the Government for the conspicuous part that the little ones had in the winning of the war.

The occasion was the great "Safety-First" rally, organized by Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo, Superintendent of Schools Ettinger, Police Commissioner Enright, a committee of one hundred headed by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., the automobile interests led by H. S. Firestone, and Director Edward Bowes of the Capitol, having for its purpose the inauguration of an educational campaign to reduce the tremendous loss of life due to automobile accidents. The children cheered the Government representative to the echo, and Secretary Baker departed amid an ovation in which the loudly-voiced approval of the youngsters mingled with the strains of the Police Band playing the "Star Spangled Banner."

The affair was the largest gathering of school children ever held in New York under roof, and presented all the physical characteristics of a political convention. Great banners bearing the identification of the various school districts and the names of the district superintendent of education in charge, marked the divisions of the house.

The feature picture shown was "Careless America," made by the Universal's Industrial Department for H. S. Firestone, of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio. Many new scenes were made specially for this occasion in order that the best possible lesson of "safety first" might be carried home to the school children.

New Alignment of Capital Heads

B. Herbert Milligan Is Elected Treasurer; Development Plan

THE new year has ushered in stirring times for the Capital Film Company, Inc., which has forged steadily forward to a secure position in the front ranks of the successful producing and distributing motion picture organizations.

In keeping with its big new business development there has been a new and important alignment of the executive heads of the corporation. At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors, B. Herbert Milligan of Chicago was elected treasurer and executive head of the Capital Film Company, and also to the directorate.

President Barnhardt and General Manager Eckels at present are in New York forming new alliances, purchasing new pictures and planning further developments in the progressive policy of the company.

Mr. Milligan, who is a successful business man and president of a well-known financial concern of Chicago, has been interested to some extent in the motion picture business, having, in partnership with his brother, some time ago taken over the Kalem studios.

Following along its new lines of development and the better to handle its fast increasing business, the Capital Film Company has leased the entire second floor of the Consumers Building for its executive offices. This move gives the Capital 12,000 square feet of office space, which will be utilized to form the most commodious general offices occupied by any film company in the country.

Mr. Milligan brings to the Capital personnel a genius for efficient organization which has long been acknowledged by his associates in his other business enterprises, and to which his striking successful career is largely attributed.

It is Mr. Milligan's plan to apply these successful commercial principles to the rapidly expanding business of the Capital Film Company, not only for the financial benefit of its stockholders, but as well for advancing the material interests of Capital's ever lengthening list of exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

Immediate action will be taken by Mr. Milligan looking to the increase of the Capital's production output. The demand for Capital special short features is increasing at a ratio which, Mr. Milligan says, makes it imperatively necessary to at once increase Capital's producing forces to six companies in place of four, as at present.

B. Herbert Milligan who has been elected treasurer and executive head of Capital Film Corporation

Especial attention is also being given to the maintenance and extension of the Capital company's European business, which is increasing beyond all expectations, especially throughout the United Kingdom.

Metro Welcomes 1920 at Capitol

First Three Weeks of January Find Metro Films on Screen

THE New Year started with an auspicious flourish at the Capitol theatre, New York City's newest motion-picture temple, with three Metro productions booked for the first three weeks of the month of January. "Officials at the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation were jubilant over this striking tribute to the quality and pulling power of the second round of 'fewer and better' pictures," says the Metro report at hand.

"Should a Woman Tell?" an original melodrama by Finis Fox, was billed for the week of January 4-10. This production presented to Broadway motion picture patrons a new dramatic personality in Alice Lake, the featured player. Others in the cast included Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier. A big exploitation campaign, consisting in the leasing, in Manhattan, of 150 billboards including twenty-four illuminated stands, accompanied the presentation of the special, it is stated.

Lilie Leslie, who plays "Lady Blanche" in "The Best of Luck," now in preparation for the screen through Metro

Figures obtained by the Metro company from the management of the Capitol theatre stated that "Should a Woman Tell?" had proved to be a successful box-office attraction. The unqualified approval given this production by the management was the first actual test from the box-office viewpoint of the judgment of Metro officials in making this single departure from the policy of using only tested novels and stage successes. Nazimova in "Stronger than Death" was billed at the Capitol for the week of January 11-17. This production was adapted by Charles Bryant from one of I. A. R. Wylie's novels of life in India, and was directed by Herbert Blache and Charles Bryant.

In "Stronger than Death" Nazimova again appears in one of the highly emotional and picturesque roles for which she is famous. Spectacular art effects, including a reconstructed replica of the Temple of Vishnu in India, were designed for the producting by Benjamin Carre, the art director, it is stated.

For the third week of January, from the 18th to the 24th, the attraction will be the Metro-Classic picturization of "The Willow Tree," starring Viola Dana. It was adapted from the stage fantasy of old Japan which was written by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes by June Mathis. The play, when originally produced by Cohan and Harris on Broadway, played for more than a season with Fay Bainter in the stellar role, Metro Pictures reports.

Viola Dana has the role of the image-maker's daughter in the screen version of the play and has achieved a most artistic characterization, according to critics who have witnessed an advance showing. An entire Japanese garden was built at the Metro studios in Hollywood for the play, close to the Administration building. It has been preserved and will be used as a recreation center for the employes at the studio, it is said.

New Director Handling Kaufman Series

John Lopez has been named to direct the remaining pictures in the Herbert Kaufman series being made by Selznick Pictures at Fort Lee, N. J., it was announced this week by Myron Selznick. Two of the Kaufman Weekly releases had been directed by Burton George, who has been delegated to take over the megaphone on "Prince O' Pines", a special. The two are "Little Red Riding Hood," which has been fully completed, and "The Faded Butterfly", which is announced as nearly ready for the screen. The first release of the Kaufman editorial subjects is expected about March 1.

This is Hugo Ballin, who contributed to Goldwyn pictures with his artistic skill and is now to direct Madge Kennedy

Hugo Ballin to Direct Madge Kennedy Film

Hugo Ballin will direct Madge Kennedy in the next production for this Goldwyn comedienne, and it is likely the picture will be done in the East, following the completion of "Partners of the Night" for Eminent Authors. Miss Kennedy has recently completed two productions, the first of which, "The Blooming Angel," directed by Victor Schertzinger, is scheduled for early release.

As soon as a decision is reached as to the choice of the new story, Robert B. McIntyre, in charge of Goldwyn productions in the East, will get his organization under way at the Oliver studios in East 48th street, which have been secured under lease from January 1. Mr. Ballin is already in New York for the production, it is stated.

Theatrical Families Are Represented in Cast

Four of the best known families in American theatrical history are said to be represented in the screen version of Augustus Thomas' play of American life, "The Copperhead," which is released January 25, as a Paramount Artcraft Super-Special.

Lionel Barrymore in the stellar role is a grandson of John Drew and a brother of Ethel and John Barrymore. Doris Rankin has the part she created on the stage, Ma Shanks. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin, who conducted many important productions in their theatre, called Jacobs' Third Avenue. In the part of Joey Shanks is Arthur Rankin, who is a son of Phylis Rankin, a sister of Doris Rankin. William P. Carleton, a son of William T. Carleton, the well known grand opera and comic opera singer, has the role ot Tom Hardy.

Corinne Griffith's Next

An O. Henry story, "The Memento," has been selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph as the next Corinne Griffith feature.

Republic Gets Waldorf Plays

At Least Four Productions a Year, Costing Highly, Are to Be Turned Over

A DEAL has been consummated between the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, and Waldorf Photoplays, Ltd., whereby Republic is to release for a period of not less than two years all productions of the Waldorf Company. The agreements stipulate that there shall be not less than four productions each year.

Waldorf is planning productions that will cost from $100,000 to $200,000 a subject and the distributing rights attained by Republic include the United States and Canada. The pictures will be directed by David G. Fischer, who is responsible for the big south sea production of "Where Bonds are Loosed."

The first picture will be "Dad's Girl," a screen adaptation of the old play in which Jackie Saunders, who recently made a hit in "The Miracle of Love" will be starred. The second picture to be delivered has not been determined, but it will probably be the Saturday Evening Post story entitled "The Black Sheep." "The Rider of The King Log" is scheduled for the third release. As a novel it had a wide circulation. The fourth picture will be "Kismet," in which Otis Skinner appeared on the speaking stage and which won a big success in New York. Mr. Skinner will be seen in the screen version.

In connection with "Kismet," it will be recalled that some time ago publicity was given in the trade press to a statement that a Mr. Mercanton had secured the rights to "Kismet." Republic has announced a desire to correct this impression, as "Kismet" is to be included in the Waldorf series.

Drive Attends Film's Debut

Extensive Newspaper Ads. and Other Aids to Launch "The Cinema Murder"

"THE Cinema Murder,' the special motion picture production, which is to receive its New York premiere at the Rialto theatre on January 18, will be launched into public view on a wave of publicity and advertising such as few motion pictures have ever received," announces the International Film Service Company.

It is further stated that full-page advertising smashes are being contracted for now to run in the New York American, the New York Evening Journal, the New York Sunday American, the New York Times, and the New York World. Lithographs in four colors from the one-sheet size to the twenty-four-sheet size will be plastered, it is said, all over the metropolitan district wherever empty space can be found. Special feature stories and articles written by prominent writers are reported to be another aid to exploitation that will be utilized to the full. Every possible avenue of publicity and exploitation will be taken advantage of to bring to the public the merits of this production, according to reports.

Following its one week engagement at the Rialto theatre, which begins January 18, "The Cinema Murder" is scheduled to continue its Broadway run at B. S. Moss's Broadway theatre. After its run at Moss's Broadway, it will begin a tour of the entire B. S. Moss circuit of theatres. This blanket booking by B. S. Moss himself indicates, says International Film, that shrewd showman's opinion of this production not only as a box-office attraction but also as a patron-satisfier.

OIL FIELD SERVED BY PICTURES

IN the days of the gold rush, when men of all types and characters stormed the territory of California and later of Alaska in search of the precious metal, history and tradition bear witness to the excesses that sprang up in the wake of the adventurers that flocked to those districts. Gambling, violence, murders and immorality held sway until the staying hand of the law secured a grip on the situation and established justice and order.

In these later days, a new field of enterprise has opened up in the oil fields of the Southwest, which have attracted a great array of men of all kinds and stations in somewhat the same spirit of adventure that prompted the gold-hunters of California and the Klondike. But the picture of the invasion by these men of the oil fields, as drawn by a Pathe representative, bears no resemblance to that of the gold-rush.

According to a report just issued by the Pathe Exchange, its representative, while touring the newly opened oil fields, found an "unusually large number of picture theatres, all of which were doing tremendous business. Exhibitors were paying high prices too, for their product. The oil men demand the best, and are willing to pay for it.

"Instead of demanding the wild and wooly adventure pictures one might expect a hardy fortune hunter would crave, Pathe's representative found that photoplays with plenty of human and love interest, made the ideal attractions in the oil regions. For instance, the Pershing theatre, the pride of Burkburnett, one of the righest oil districts in the world, booked pictures of the following order: 'The A. B. C| of Love,' 'The Right to Lie,' 'The Prince and Betty,' 'Other Men's Shoes,' 'My Husband's Other Wife,' 'The Web of Deceit,' and 'Fighting Cressy.'"

Glaum Feature Gets a Big Start

Many of Country's Finest Houses Run "Lone Wolf's Daughter"

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S, knowledge of the exact dramatic materials demanded by exhibitors in a large measure accounts for the success reported on his second big Louise Glaum special production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance and distributed by the Hodkinson organization. Exhibitors' own reports are said to rank this as a dramatically and technically perfect production and reports likewise strongly fix it as one of the few really big productions of the past twelve months. The reception of it by first-run exhibitors has been exceptionally enthusiastic and it has gone into the biggest theatres for immediate play dates.

Just two pictures, "Sahara" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" have established Louise Glaum with leading feminine stars and all of the following that has recognized in her an emotional star have shown their approval of her by the patronage given to exhibitors since J. Parker Read, Jr., began his production of stories with Miss Glaum as the star.

Jesse L. Lasky Issues Statements

Official Returns from West Enthusiastic Over Prospects

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has issued the following statement upon his return to New York after a stay of several months on the Pacific Coast, where he is reported to have made a thorough inspection of the corporation's western producing organization. The statement follows in part:

"If we in the motion picture industry ever thought we had seen the limit of big motion picture production," said Mr. Lasky, "we are destined to be pleasantly surprised in the next few months; for the rest of this season of 1920 will see the release of some of the most artistic, spectacular and dramatic pictures ever put on the screen. The hour of the big special has struck, and the vast army of motion picture lovers all over the country in the coming months will see the screen rise to new heights of artistic expression.

"This is not a generality. I have seen Cecil B. DeMille making 'Why Change Your Wife?' And then I have seen this wonderful picture on the screen. It is strong drama, beautifully done, and will prove a fitting successor to those other big Cecil B. DeMille successes, 'Why Change Your Husband,' 'Male and Female,' and 'For Better, for Worse.'

"Then there is William D. Taylor's production of 'Huckleberry Finn.' Mr. Taylor is a lover of Mark Twain's books, and in this production of the great humorist's masterpiece he has lavished all the care and artistic attention that such a great story demands. 'Huckleberry Finn' is the most widely read of American books, and has made millions of friends wherever the English language is read. As a motion picture its public is already assured in the tremendous number of people who have read Mark Twain's books. And these people will not be disappointed, for Mr. Taylor has closely followed the text of the story and has translated the atmosphere of Mark Twain with remarkable fidelity.

"Maurice Tourneur has finished his production of 'Treasure Island,' and I promise every reader of Stevenson's book that the picture will contain all the thrills and picturesqueness that made the story a classic of English literature.

"George Melford's production of Jack London's story, 'The Sea Wolf' is another example of the big special productions which exhibitors can look forward to.

"Just before I left Los Angeles, George Melford had started his production of Roscoe Arbuckle in 'The Round-Up.'

"William DeMille is busy on his special production of 'The Prince Chap,' with Thomas Meighan in the title-role. Mr. Meighan's sterling abilities make him ideal for this role, and Mr. DeMille is planning an extraordinarily lavish production."

Nat'l Film Plans Busy Year

An "All-American" Program for 1920; Executive Predicts Successful Year

"A YEAR of smashing success is predicted for the National Film Corporation of America by Capt. Harry M. Rubey, president of that concern. It will be an "All-American" year for the National, according to word received from the West coast studios, as the tentative plans are to the effect that the productions will be confined to the screening of American stories by American authors. The first of this series is already in production, while active work on the second will commence within three weeks. A new serial will also be included in the 1920 program, with Jack Hoxie in the stellar role.

The first of the National's 1920, which will be marketed about March first, is Opie P. Read's "The Kentucky Colonel" with a good cast including Joseph J. Dowling, Francis McDonald, Elinor Field, Lloyd Bacon, Fred Kohler, Thelma Salters, Gordon Griffiths and many others.

"Mary Minds Her Business", a Mildred Considine adaptation of the George Weston story, now running serially in the Ladies Home Journal, will be the second of National's "All-American" series, it is stated.

As soon as Flanagan and Edwards return from a trip to the Pacific-Northwest, work will be resumed.

Claire Whitney, who is appearing in the Jose production, "Mothers of Men," released by the Republic Distributing Corp.

Republic Will Distribute "Mothers of Men"

"Mothers Of Men", a special production made by Films Special, Inc., and directed by Edward Jose, is announced for early release by the Republic Distributing Corporation of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton N. Busch, president. This is, perhaps, the biggest production announced by Republic since it released "When Bearcat Went Dry".

The stars are Claire Whitney, Lumsden Hare and Martha Mansfield and the screen version was adapted from the story written by William Henry Warner and DeWitte Kaplan.

"The Love Expert" for Constance Talmadge

Joseph M. Schenck is reported to have purchased an original story by John Emerson and Anita Loos, "The Love Expert", for Constance Talmadge' fifth First National. This story will be directed by David Kirkland, and the exteriors will be made at Palm Beach, Fla., where Constance will spend the month of February. This picture will follow the release of "In Search Of A Sinner", which is now completed and is expected to have its initial showing in New York some time in March.

"The Gay Old Dog" Still Winning Applaudits

"The Gay Old Dog", Hobart Henley's first great production for Pathe distribution, adapted for the screen by Mrs. Sidney Drew from the story by Edna Ferber, is said to be still winning the plaudits of exhibitors and critics throughout the country. One of the highest tributes comes from the critic of the Indianapolis Star, who expresses the opinion that, "Extraordinary is the only word that comes near covering the ground in describing 'The Gay Old Dog.' "

Republic Opens Office

It was announced this week that the New Orleans office of the Republic Distributing Corporation will be reopened February 1, with J. F. Flaherty in charge. The office in Omaha will also be reopened about the same time, it is made known, with J. H. Hill in charge.

Selznick To Make a Serial

Albert Payson Terhune Is Author; Another Step in Planned Expansion

FURTHER indication that the producing activities of Selznick Enterprises are to include all classes of films that have proven money makers for the exhibitors of the country was evidenced this week in the announcement that Albert Payson Terhune has been engaged to write the first serial to be produced by the Selznick organization.

This bit of interesting news to exhibitors and the public came from Myron Selznick, who reserved the name and theme of the serial for a later announcement. Mr. Selznick accented the fact, however, that in its first serial production, as in all its other motion picture activities, greatest care would be taken to make the picture exactly what exhibitors want, which is another way of saying that it will also be what the general public wants. It is deemed especially significant that the Selznick organization has decided to enter the serial production field. For the past several weeks exhibitors have noticed daily that the Selznick forces were getting into a stride for the new year which promises to eclipse the pace in picture making that has been set in the past. The serial announcement is but another link in the strong chain being forged.

It will be attempted, according to Mr. Selznick, to raise the standard of serial motion pictures higher than it has yet been. The fact that Albert Payson Terhune will write the first one bears this declaration out.

Robert Ellis has been chosen to direct the Select serial.

Although no definite announcement has been made regarding the actual producing of the serial, it is probable that it will be made at the Eastern studios of Selznick.

Supporting Cast for Leonard

Frank Hall Announces Names of Cast to Support Champion in New Serial

FRANK G. HALL, President, Hallmark Pictures Corporation, Wally Van, Supervising Director, and J. Gordon Cooper, Director for the Benny Leonard serial, work on which commenced this week at Hallmark's 38th Street Studio, announce the following have been engaged for the principal supporting roles opposite the lightweight champion in his Hallmark serial, "The Evil Eye," the screen version of an original story by Roy L. McCardell: Ruth Dwyer, leading woman; Stuart Holmes, heavy; Marie Shotwell, Grand de Dame; Bernard Randall, the "Dopey Benny" part, and Mme. Marstino, female heavy.

Miss Dwyer, Leonard's leading woman, is a blonde ingenue type and was last seen as ingenue lead in the fifteen episode serial, "The Lurking Peril," co-starring Anne Luther and George Larkin.

Stuart Holmes is probably one of the best known villian-types working before the camera today. He has supported such well-known stars as Clara Kimball Young, Theda Bara, Norma Talmadge and Bertha Kalich.

Marie Shotwell is known both on the stage and screen for her dramatic impersonations. Her last work was seen in Hallmark's Famous Directors' picture, "Chains of Evidence." In this production Miss Shotwell was co-starred with Edmond Breeze and Anna Lehr.

Bernard Randall, who has the "dopey Benny" part, has recently completed a 6-reel special, in which he portrays the heavy role opposite Margaret Marsh in a Harry Grossman production, recently taken over for distribution by Mr. Hall. Mme. Marstino, who has the female heavy part, will be remembered for her work in Wm. Fox's production of Charles Dicken's "Tale of Two Cities."

Wiley President of New Company

Hyperion Productions Formed with Producer as Head

WITH the incorporation last week of the Hyperion Productions, Inc., of which George H. Wiley, who has long been prominently identified with the industry as a producer, is named as president, it developed that the new company's policy is to produce six massive super-feature productions a year.

In a brief statement just issued, Mr. Wiley states that it is the company's intention to produce only the works of noted authors, who in turn will work in close association with the director and continuity writer, thereby at all times supervising the production of their play or story. Each production is to be staged on an exceptionally elaborate scale, with expense figured as a secondary matter. "It is our plan," says Mr. Wiley, "to give the exhibitors throughout the country a class of productions that will establish a new precedent in picture making. No single star's name will top the productions, but instead each picture will carry the services of a group of stars, thereby giving the exhibitor three or four big artists in each production in place of one as has been the usual policy with other producers in the past.

"The rights to several big Broadway 'successes' as well as two 'best sellers,' the titles of which will be disclosed at an early date, have already been acquired by the company, and work on the adaptations have been started.

"The productions will be staged under the personal direction of James Vincent, who is responsible for the big success of numerous Fox Special Productions starring Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson and Bertha Kalish, as well as the crowning achievement of having produced C. N. and A. M. Williamson's great mystery story, 'A Woman in Grey,' which has been widely acclaimed as the serial sensation of the year.

"Two other noteworthy additions to the new company are Walter Richard Hall and Joseph W. Farnham. Hall, who has proven himself one of the most capable of the present-day screen dramatists, will make the screen adaptations of the plays and books acquired by the company, while Farnham will have entire charge of the editing and titling of each production."

Further announcements of the acquisition of stars, titles of books and plays and the plans of distribution will be made at an early date.

To Release State Right Series

Herman Jans Announces Features Included on Release List

HERMAN F. JANS, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., announces that his company will release their series of features on the state rights basis. The first series of features to be state righted under this plan will be the pictures being produced by B. A. Rolfe with Olive Tell as the star. The initial release will be "Love Without Question," a photodramatic adaptation of C. Wadsworth Camp's well-known novel, "The Abandoned Room," following which Mr. Rolfe will produce a filmization of C. Belmont Davis' best seller, "Nothing a Year."

Commenting on forthcoming releases, the Jans Pictures, Inc., has issued the following statement:

"Probably never before has the independent exchange had the opportunity of acquiring for release a series of features. It is generally the opinion of such exchange men that they are extremely fortunate to be able to sign contracts for one such feature at a time, but with the Jans pictures it is a case of being able to guarantee their customers a series of real features, pictures that the producers have pledged to make decidedly out of the ordinary and real box-office attractions.

"Offers have come from many parts of the country from state right buyers who are anxious to sign up for the Jans productions, and it is expected that territory will quickly be sold. Mr. Jans states that those independent exchange men who want to contract for this series of features should lose no time in getting in touch with him. Territory will be disposed of on the 'first come, first served' basis, and it cannot be supposed that an opportunity of this nature will be waiting long."

Pioneer Plans Non-Theatrical Department

During the last month the Pioneer System of Co-operative Exchanges have been trying out several experiments. One of these experiments dealt with the possibilities lying in the non-theatrical field. A study of the market for Pioneer attractions in churches, schools and social work centres has convinced the Pioneer general staff that the time is ripe for the establishment of a non-theatrical department to serve this important field.

Astor Buys "U-35" Print

To Use It for Private Showing; Territory Selling Fast on U-Boat Film

VINCENT ASTOR attended the Capitol theatre, New York, and saw "The Log of the U-35," showing there the week of January 5. It is said that he was so impressed with the picture that he purchased a positive print of it from the C. B. Price Co., Inc., for private showing in his own home. "It possesses special charm to Mr. Astor," says the C. B. Price Company, "on account of his services as lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy, during the world war, on the submarine chaser Noma, his own private yacht, which he loaned to the United States Government. It is thought that the U-35 had fired on the Noma. The Noma at the time was patrolling the Pennyarch district of the ocean and for that reason the unknown commander of the mysterious submarine was nicknamed "Pennyarch Pete." Seaplanes were sent from the Noma in search of the invader and depth bombs were dropped over the place she was last seen, in an effort to destroy it."

The C. B. Price Co., Inc., announces that it has sold state rights for "The Log of the U-35" to the following concerns: Arrow Film Co. of St. Louis, for eastern Missouri and southern Illinois; Crescent Film Co. of Kansas City, for western Missouri and Kansas; Alexander Film Corporation, 130 West 46th street, New York City, up to Albany and northern New Jersey; Equity Pictures Co., San Francisco, for California, Nevada, Arizona and Hawaii; Metro Pictures, Philadelphia, for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

Industry Booming in Canada

M. H. Hoffman of Pioneer Back from Trip Reports Progressive Spirit

M. H. HOFFMAN, general manager of the Pioneer, after an extensive tour of Canada, is now back at the New York headquarters. Mr. Hoffman's trip was confined to a close study of conditions in the eastern section of the Dominion.

In speaking of his observations of conditions over the border, Mr. Hoffman said: "Don't let any Yankee think for a moment that the American habit of indomitable push and wide energy is confined to the States.

"One has only to talk to the leading Canadians to be convinced that the Dominion is electrified with boundless possibilities. The next few years will see Canada one of the most progressive countries in the world.

"This spirit is particularly evident in film circles. The film business is going ahead by leaps and bounds, large theatres are being constructed, and if the plans of the Canadian contributors are only half realized we may look for results that will be second to none.

"I had heard that Canada was on the forward march, but not until I went there did I realize the great extent of this progressive movement. I came away with memories of many a delightful chat with unknown friends whom I met on the street, in hotels and on the trains. The man in the street as well as those in high authority all seem inspired with this grim determination to secure for Canada a 'Place in the Sun.'

"State-Right Field Growing

Manheimer Says That the Independent Market Is Getting a Rapid Expansion

MR. E. S. MANHEIMER, General Manager, Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., waxes enthusiastic over the reported rapidity of the sales of state rights on "The Sacred Flame." "Seems as though the independent exchanges and state rights buyer are growing faster than any other branch of the industry," says Mr. Manheimer. "At least, so I am led to believe from the number of inquiries we have received on 'The Sacred Flame,' starring Emily Stevens. I thought that I knew the majority of state rights buyers and independent exchange men, having spent the last twelve years in this particular branch of the film business, but the number of independents are doubling and tripling, to me a healthy indication, disputing entirely the idea that the film business is in the hands of a dozen powerful producers.

"'The Sacred Flame,' with M Stevens, offers a splendid vehicle f this popular star. It is distinctly American story dealing with American characters. People wa human stories dealing with hum beings as they live and work. Th 'The Sacred Flame' contains all t red-blooded elements of human i terest is proven by the splendid cri cisms of the hardened critics in a out of the film industry."

Mr. Manheimer makes his offic at 126 West 46th Street, New Yor and wishes to say to the trade that a elaborate advertising and publici campaign book is now in the printer hands, which will contain an unusua ly elaborate series of newspaper di play ads, publicity material and hel ful suggestions for exhibitors.

Triple Role in Monopol Fil

Statement Made on "Crimson Shoals" Gives Story of Triple Picture Role

THE Monopol Pictures Company has issued the following statement with regards to its feature attraction, "Crimson Shoals," now for sale on the independent market:

"'Crimson Shoals,' a feature offering that combines a dramatic story with what is claimed to be the first successful example of a consistent triple characterization running throughout a story, is one of Monopol Pictures Company's big novelties on the market just now.

"The story is a tale of feud between father, son and grandson, the two former being unaware of the identity of the third. Its action takes place on an uncharted island, somewhere in a locality where vast wealths of coral are found and where nature is said to have presented a background for th story at once dramatic and beautifu in its ruggedness. There is a stron romantic theme running current wit the action, and the ever-present nov elty of one actor seen repeatedly i three characterizations at the sam time in the same scene.

"Monopol Pictures Company ar carrying on an exhaustive campaig with the feature, and meeting wit healthy response in the way of terri torial bids. The picture has big nov elty as its first recommendation added to this is an excellent cast an a snappy melodramatic story. Som of the photography, too, notably th great stretches of sea-swept sand an rock, has occasioned favorable comment."

Protests Bill Against "Thrill" Pictures

Senator Gore of Oklahoma is reported to have introduced a bill to prohibit Interstate transportation of "blood and thunder" films or "stills". Arthur B. Reeve, vice-president of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., takes issue with the senator in a lengthy statement from which the following pertinent remarks have been taken:

"Why not assail the daily newspapers that print thrilling stories of sensational murders, robberies and deeds of heroism as well as crime?" Mr. Reeve protests indignantly. "Why not forbid the reading of all history, which is filled with thrills?"

"Gore's bill would do away with Mother Goose, with all fairy tales and legends, all folk songs; all are thrills written to stir human nature from the baby to the bearded warrior."

Under the principle involved in Senator Gore's proposed bill, says Mr. Reeve: "Our heroes would go down through the coming ages unhonored and unsung, for their stories are 'thrillers" of the most pronounced "blood and thunder" type."

Lesser Organization Exploiting "Sky-Eye"

The Sol Lesser organization is now under way on a national exploitation campaign for "Sky-Eye," the six reel aero feature which is being released on a state right basis. The territories which Mr. Lesser controls personally, namely Ohio, Seattle, California, Nevada, Arizona, and Greater New York, have also made preparations for local exploitation, and many bookings are reported for this feature. Irving Lesser is now on his way from the coast to make special showings in Chicago, where it is stated he will receive the co-operation of the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motor Corporation.

National Film Corp. Is Wholly Independent

"There has been much confusion, especially recently, resulting from similarity in the name of the National Film Corporation of America and other producing and releasing firms," states Capt. Harry M. Rubey, president of National Film Corporation of America, "so I think that it is best for all concerned that I reiterate that the National Film Corporation of America has never been, and never will be, allied with any other concern. We are independent producers and intend so to remain."

Alexander Film Corp. Gets "U 35" Film

According to a report from the Alexander Film Corporation, contracts were closed today between the C. B. Price Company and the Alexander Film Corporation for the Log of the "U 35," now playing at the Capitol Theatre, New York City. The latter corporation will handle the distribution of this two-reel picture in New York and northern Jersey. This is the initial release of the Alexander Company, which takes over the fourth floor of the Leavitt building on February 1st, it is stated.

The appeal of "Empty Arms," in which Gail Kane is being star red and to be placed on the market in the near future, may be judged by this cut. It is a heart-interest story of unusual worth according to those who have seen the picture

"Empty Arms" Ready for Market

Park-Whiteside Picture Made with Painstaking Care to Detail

"EMPTY ARMS," the Lester Park-Edward Whiteside production, just completed at the Thanhouser Studios at New Rochelle, was this week voted a sensation by a number of magazine and newspaper editors who saw it privately projected. The basic theme of the photoplay is the glorification of Motherhood.

The story is from the pen of Willard King Bradley, well-known contributor to nationally-circulated periodicals, who has to his credit scores of successful screen stories, included among which are a number of the early Biograph pictures. Bradley also wrote the continuity of "Empty Arms" and assisted in its production.

"In 'Empty Arms,'" Mr. Park says, "I am confident we have one of the pictures of 1920—a picture, I'm certain, which will not be forgotten once the screen goes black after the final fade-out.

"I attribute the indubitable merit possessed by 'Empty Arms' to the fact that it was so carefully planned out and not rushed haphazardly into production, as so frequently is the case nowadays in certain studios where such annoying things as release-dates must be lived up to.

"It was early in July of last year when Willard King Bradley, the author of 'Empty Arms,' brought me the story. After reading it, I perceived at once that it contained splendid possibilities.

"After purchasing the story and engaging its author to write the continuity, I began to look about for a woman star, one who was possessed of both beauty and genuine acting ability.

"Somebody suggested Gail Kane, and immediately I realized that she was the one star who could do justice to the part. I communicated with her personal representative who informed me that Miss Kane was touring the larger cities with the A. H. Woods success, 'The Woman in Room 13.'

"Deciding to have Miss Kane at any cost, I personally called on her in Baltimore, where she was playing a one-week engagement. My business necessitated three visits, but I finally succeeded in persuading her to affix her signature to a contract I had brought with me.

"Thurston Hall, who is scoring a pronounced personal hit as the star in 'Civilian Clothes,' the current success at the Morosco Theatre, appears opposite Miss Kane in 'Empty Arms.' He portrays the exacting role of Bruce Gordon, a wealthy clubman whose love for Diane Summers is so great that he thrusts aside his desires for a home and all that it means in order to satisfy her Nature-defying whims, marrying her with the understanding that they are to be nothing more than mere friends.

"The 'heavy' role in 'Empty Arms' has fallen to J. Herbert Frank, whose work opposite Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Alice Brady, Constance Talmadge and Mabel Normand.

"The camera work was handled by Harry Keepers and George Benoit, who have produced a negative of unusual clarity and brilliance."

No announcement as to how "Empty Arms" will be handled has as yet been made by either Mr. Park or Mr. Whiteside.

Frohman Company in the South to Take Scenes

The entire cast and directorial staff, now engaged in the making of The Frohman Amusement Corporation serial, "The Invisible Ray," left last week for Jacksonville and Miami, Florida, there to take the water episodes that appear in that production. "The Invisible Ray" is said to have a wide variety of locations, and among these are scenes laid on docks, steam yachts, motor launches, hydroplanes and aeroplanes. In order to insure fidelity to detail, it was found necessary to proceed to southern waters where water craft of a wide variety finds refuge for the winter. It is expected that the company will remain south for about two weeks.

British Company Gets "Auction of Souls"

The General Film Renting Company of England, recently purchased through David P. Howells, foreign representative of First National Exhibitors Circuit, "Auction of Souls" for British Isles. This picture is being given wide publicity, and is looked upon by the British exhibitor as something out of the ordinary. It was shown privately at the Queens Hall, London, and a trade showing was also given at the London Coliseum. Considerable enthusiasm greeted the picture at both screenings, it is said. Negotiations for this production were carried out by Mr. H. D. Hardwicke, managing director for the General Film Co.

"The Return of Tarzan" Cast Gets Additions

When Numa Pictures Corporation engaged the animals for the cast presenting "The Return of Tarzan," now nearing completion in California, they took the trainer's word for it that there were to be 7 lions and lionesses, 2 tigers, 3 elephants and an assortment of monkeys and apes in the outfit. Two days after jungle stuff was started, the cast was augmented by four cubs—rolly-poly children of a somber-eyed lioness. The cubs are ten days old and doing nicely according to latest advices.

W. Playter Announces Plans

Newly Acquired Plant in Spokane Is Being Perfected for Extensive Work

THE Playter Photoplayers, Inc., since purchasing the motion-picture plant and equipment at Minnehaha Park, Spokane, Wash., some three months ago, have been busily engaged, not only in building a big feature production for the Cathrine Curtis corporation, but have perfected their organization and facilities for the manufacture of a varied program of feature and comedy motion-pictures for the coming year, according to Wellington A. Playter, president. He says:

"The negative secured by the Cathrine Curtis corporation has proved, beyond the shadow of a doubt, not only the quality of the sunlight here in the Inland Empire but the exceptional grandeur of its scenic values. Miss Curtis, and those who have viewed the finished product thus far, have all concurred in the opinion that Spokane and its environs are destined for big things in the motion-picture field.

"The Playter Photoplayers will soon begin the production of 25 one reel comedies, releasing these once every two weeks throughout the ensuing year. Contracts have already been signed with International Films, Inc., A. D. Frost, president, whereby this last corporation will build four big feature productions during 1920. The first of these will be an exceptional story by J. Winthrop Kelly, whose record embraces the Williamson 'Submarine Eye,' Maurice Tourneur's spectacular production 'Sporting Life,' and 'A Daughter of the Sea.'

"Negotiations are now nearing completion whereby the Playter Photoplayers will acquire several well-known stories from the pen of James Oliver Curwood and Ralph Connor. Holman Day has also entered into negotiations relative to some of his popular works, so that the available material controlled by the Playter corporation will mean big things during 1920."

Personal and Otherwise

George Fitzmaurice is using an unusually effective set, of Moorish design, in the "Man Who Killed," starring Mae Murray. Holmes E. Herbert, who has done excellent work in a number of Famous Players productions recently, is playing one of the leads, while David Powell has the other.

Frank Losee thinks it would be a good idea if newspaper reporters, before going out to interview members of the profession, would post themselves about some of the well-known names of bygone days, at least. After a recent death in Mr. Losee's family, a representative called to see Mrs. Losee, and the Famous Players leading man reports the conversation as follows: Reporter, "Whose house is this—Mr. Loos'?" "No, Mr. Losee's." "Who is he? What does he do?" "Mr. Losee is an actor, a descendant of Jefferson's." "Jefferson? Who was he?" "Mr. Jefferson was also an actor." "What was his first name?"

Miriam Batista, aged five and a half, who is appearing nightly at the Standard theatre in "The Whirlwind," is playing the part that Alma Rubens will afterwards complete, in the International production of "Humoresque." That is, Miriam is playing the child who grows into the girl that Miss Rubens will impersonate. Frank Borzage is directing the picture, and last week two scenes, calling for different players, were in progress at the same time, while Mr. Borzage supervised them both.

On a floor above, at the same studio, Robert Leonard was busy with a supposedly amateur performance given by the college boys in "The Restless Sex." Marion Davies, looking very lovely in a charmingly simple pale blue georgette dress with a large garden hat hanging down her back by a rose colored ribbon, was seated in a stage box, surrounded by an interested audience, while Ralph Kellard and Billy Bann, of Yip, Yip, Yaphank fame and three other female impersonators entertained them on a real stage.

The United States Photoplay Corp. have under contract Lt. B. W. Maynard, the Flying Parson, Tod Sloan, the Premier Jockey of the World, and "Kid" Broad. They have leased the Lincoln Studio at Grantwood, N. J., for two years for the production of "Determination," "The Home of Man," "The Soul of Man" and "Deception." It is planned to make all these productions ten-reelers, and the estimated cost of "Determination" alone is $500,000. "Determination" is said to be a Whitechapel story and an Apache story, including four international sporting events.

Myrtle Stedman has finished her picture "Sex" with Louise Glaum, and is now playing opposite her old time favorite, Hobart Bosworth, in Jack London's "Sea Wolf." Miss Stedman will portray the character of Maud Brewster, and believes that it will offer her an opportunity for great versatility.

May McAvoy writes that she is having the most delightful time in New Orleans as a member of Alice Joyce's company in "The Sporting Duchess." One feature of the production is the race track scenes, which, of course, necessitated the members of the company being frequently at the track, and Miss McAvoy discovered that betting on the horses was one of the most exciting sports she had ever tried. She also visited an orange grove and was allowed to pick oranges and grapefruit from the trees herself. She is accompanied by her mother and will visit friends in Jacksonville and Savannah before returning home.

Mr. Jiggs and Family Arrive in Los Angeles

Great stars of the stage and screen arrive almost daily in Los Angeles with scarcely a ripple on the surface of civic affairs and it is not often that official cognizance is taken of such an event. So it was nothing short of a sensation when the chief officials of the city went to the Santa Fe station upon the arrival of the Overland Limited a few days ago and formally welcomed to "Califilmia", the famous Mr. Jiggs, his wife Maggie and their handsome daughter Nora, the three famous cartoon creations of Artist George McManus.

As the Limited came to a stop cameras started clicking. A beautiful young lady swathed in furs stepped off to the station platform first. The crowd quickly recognized her as "daughter." She motioned excitedly toward the pullman and "Maggie" emerged. There was a shout of laughter and welcome. Then both cried out to father and out he came loaded with baggage which he refused to trust to a dusky redcap. There wasn't any doubt as to his identity in the mind of a single spectator.

When Mr. Jiggs had safely reached the platform followed by his secretary, the formalities began. Director Al Christie, under whose guidance the "Bringing Up Father" comedies are being made, stepped forward and greeted the family. Then he introduced "Jiggs" to the temporary head of the city administration, President Boyle Workman of the City Council. Acting Mayor Workman officially welcomed the Jiggs family. Ivan St. Johns, secretary to Mayor Snyder, then stepped forward with the great key to the city which has been presented to so many notables in the past. It was gravely proffered to Mr. Jiggs.

"Ah, the key to the mayor's cellar!" said Jiggs with an anticipatory smile.

"No," declared the acting mayor with a laugh; "the key to the city."

"Oh," was the disappointed reply, "that's too bad."

Then Chief of Police George Home was introduced and Jiggs stepped forward with his best smile and his right hand pushed forward. But the chief ignored the proffered hand.

Norma Phillips, the "Mutual Girl," who has returned to the screen after a considerable absence

"There seems to be some mistake, said the chief sternly. "I came her to warn you not to welcome you. Remember, everything will be O. K. b no rough stuff goes here."

The role of Mr. Jiggs is being take by Johnny Ray of vaudeville fam Margaret FitzRoy, a well-known character woman, is "Maggie" and Laur LaPlante, one of the prettiest of th Christie girls, is the heiress to th Jiggs fortunes. Other well-know film players who will be seen in th first comedy are Ward Caulfield, Jac Henderson, George George, Eddi Baker and Paddy McGuire

Making King Cole Comics

THE Motion Picture Producing Company of America had remodelled a studio somewhere on Staten Island. That much we knew, and being interested in studios, we contemplated a visit for several months. Finally our opportunity arrived, and we were invited to go to see Sammy Burns and Marion Warner at work on one of the forthcoming King Cole Comedies, in which Mr. Burns is directing and starring. We started for the studio in question.

After two hours on subways and ferries and trains, we decided that Mr. Burns will never have to worry about securing one of those efficient door-keepers who almost keep the stars themselves out of their own studios. We feel sure that if an extra succeeds in finding that studio, Mr. Burns will give him a job as a detective in his next production. We have always considered Flatbush remote and Fort Lee inaccessible, but we recommend Dongan Hills to anyone looking for rest and quiet far removed from lights and excitement of Broadway.

We found Mr. Burns and Miss Warner extremely busy with an important scene in which a bust of Napoleon would subsequently fade into the figure of Miss Warner's sweetheart, so that the action had to be timed and placed very carefully. Mr. Burns' patience seemed endless, and he worked with absolute concentration and thoroughness. Miss Warner was equally serious and anxious to have her slightest movements right.

The act that impressed us most was the infinite care and serious labor that go into just a few feet of film that are run off on the screen in less than a minute. During that minute the action must serve its purpose by bringing a hearty laugh from the audience, who probably wonder, if they think about it at all, "Do they get paid for doing that?" Often the action that looks the easiest and the quickest, is that over which the most sincere effort and hardest work has been spent. It really isn't easy to make bits of humor from a typewritten script look perfectly spontaneous and accidental.

We also found that distance from New York doesn't seem to have prevented the King Cole Comedies from having all the "props" they want for whatever sets they wish to use. Miss Warner was supposed to be sleeping in the coziest kind of a little cozy corner, and there were all sorts of rooms in other parts of the studio waiting for their turn to be used. So watch out for some unusually funny "funny pictures" in the near future.—M. J.

Doris Kenyon, who has temporarily deserted the screen for the stage production of "The Girl in the Limousine," claims the honor of having two books dedicated to her by Fullerton Waldo, writer and one of the editors of the Philadelphia Ledger. The first is a little book of sonnets, ten in number, which Miss Kenyon declares exquisite in quality and sentiment. The second is written around Mr. Waldo's experience in Labrador where he spent last summer with Dr. Grenfell, the explorer. In his review of Dr. Kenyon's collection of verse, "The Harvest Home", to which his daughter contributed nine poems, Mr. Waldo says that Miss Kenyon has a candor of expression fine and true—the candor of such a girl as Lorna Doone must have been—or a Shakespearian heroine.

Dorothy Dalton of Stage and Screen

I'M not doing a single thing outside the studio and theatre but sleeping, but I'm going to make up for all this work next summer. If you only knew the marvelous summer I'm planning!"

Dorothy Dalton's eyes glistened, her voice was full of enthusiasm, and she looked so buoyant and happy that no one would ever have guessed that she was working from 10 A.M. to 12 P.M. every day in the week except Sunday, and every week in the year from September till, presumably, next May. How she does it, and keeps those famous dimples of hers, we don't know, but she still has the dimples, and they're even more attractive off the screen than they are on it.

We happened to find her discussing a scene with her director, Harley Knowles, at the studio, something about the set didn't please Mr. Knowles exactly, and while she waited we seized the opportunity for a little chat. As every fan knows, Miss Dalton is playing the principal role in the spectacular production of "Aphrodite" at the Century theatre, and at the same time is keeping up with her regular schedule of film work. Just now the screen story on which she is at work is one of Sir James M. Barrie's, "Half an Hour," and it will be her first production under Famous Players-Lasky management. Famous, by the way, assures us that, in spite of many facetious suggestions for different titles, such as "Thirty Minutes" and "One Twenty-fourth of a Day," "Half an Hour" will be released under its own name and the original story will be followed closely.

"Tell us about the wonderful summer," we urged, while we admired Miss Dalton's superb sable coat, blue sequins over black satin showing slightly between its opening, and tiny brown satin toque with a magnificent brown bird of paradise standing straight up in front.

"What do you do when you do what you please?" we concluded.

"Out-of-door sports," she exclaimed. "I like them much better than parties and dinners and dances. I should like to take a house on Long Island with a beach all my own, and buy the fastest motor boat that's made, and Oh—um——!" (We wish we could transcribe the tones of her voice, for Dorothy Dalton says far more by modulation than mere words can tell.) "I don't care much about yachts," she went on. "I want a speed boat—and I want a fast one! I want a horse, too," she added, "and an open car to drive myself. Oh, I do hope I can have at least six weeks in which to do all that some time!"

"How do you like your venture into the theatrical world?" we inquired.

"I love it," she responded with the emphasis that she puts upon everything she says, "but there's a terrible sense of responsibility that goes with stage work, that one doesn't have in pictures. I'm always worried for fear I might not be there when my call comes for me to go on the stage, and if it should ever happen that I weren't, well, I can't imagine what they would do. It's too frightful to think about. You see, if my car gets caught in the traffic on my way to the studio, it is a vital matter, but if I should go out dinner, and a tire should blow out ju as I was returning for an evening pe formance—I don't make any dinn engagements, that's all," she finish laughingly.

Just here we discovered that M Knowles was looking for his star, as we turned away with an impression a very ambitious, enthusiastic, ene getic girl, with tremendous vitality, keen love of life and an intense desi to experience all the thrills and all th sensations that life has to offer; wit a complete realization that nothing worth having that isn't worth workin for. —M. J.

he Plot: Janetta Gildersleeve, on her twenty-first birthday, is told by her guardian that the mining company which was left her and her brother, which has always paid them large dividends, has failed, due to the enmity and unfair play of Gordon Winfield, who has a personal grudge against her family; that a dummy company, the Northern Star, has been formed to continue working the mine, but that it will not be able to do so, unless it can establish a railroad from the mine to the waterfront before a rival company, the Unatika, does so. Whichever company succeeds in laying its tracks first will have the right of way, and the other will be forced to sell out at any price because it will have no transportation facilities. Janetta asks why the Northern Star cannot send enough men to ensure their establishing the road first, and Geddes explains that MacLeod cannot be spared from the New York office, and that it is almost impossible to obtain the services of anyone they can trust, that the Unatika are resorting to any measures and will bribe anyone they can who is working for the Northern Star. The Northern Star have engaged Barney Hoyt as their chief engineer, and they feel certain that they can trust him, but they know of no one else to send. Janetta's brother is fighting in France. Janetta is so disturbed by all this that she goes out that night alone in her roadster, forgets to watch the road, and suddenly, in order to avoid a collision with another car, has to swerve off into the underbrush on the side of the road. A tramp happens to be sleeping at the foot of a tree, and Janetta's car injures him slightly. The other car goes on, and while Janetta, horror stricken, is wondering what to do, a young man with a motorcycle comes to the rescue. She is willing to give the tramp all of the two hundred dollars she has in her purse, but she cannot bear to touch him. The young man binds up his bleeding head, tells her severely to give him only a small part of the money, as that is not the way to make amends for careless driving. He gets her car back into the road and leaves her very indignant. After thinking over the mining situation, she decides that she will take her brother's place, and go to Alaska to supervise the work in whatever way she can. Without telling her guardian, she persuades the butler, who has served her family for twenty years, to go with her, posing as her father. She forces Manager MacLeod to send her out as assistant to the company store keeper, inveigles her friend, Persis Cheever, into promising to say that she is spending the summer with her in Maine and to forward letters to her brother from there. When she reaches the mining town, she finds things much worse even than she had anticipated, but she resolves to stay for her brother's sake as well as her own. She also finds that Barney Hoyt is no other than the man who helped her on the Post Road the night she went out alone, but he does not believe that the girl he saw that night could, by any possibility, go to a mining town to keep a store.

The men are very much surprised at having a girl sent out, but when they see that she is really ready to work, they become loyal friends, with one exception. This is Hugh Malison, a miner from the Unatika, who comes to the Northern Star store in order to spy on their work. Various accidents happen from time to time, which Barney Hoyt believes are caused by the Unatika, but he is unable to prove it. One of their houses is blown up, and a little later there is a fire. Janetta happens to see a suspicious man loitering near their wharf one day and warns Hoyt. Upon investigation they discover that the wharf was wired and would probably have been blown up that night. Next Ronald Winfield appears upon the scene, saying that he is travelling for pleasure. He does not remember Janetta, but makes love to her as an attractive little store keeper. She encourages him, hoping that he will tell her what she already suspects, that it is his father who owns the Unatika. Hoyt, of course, misinterprets her motives, and his friendly attitude changes at once. Finally, Janetta learns what she wants to know, just as Winfield's father and cousin Grace join him on their yacht. The enmity is then openly acknowledged and there is a fight between the Northern Star men and the Unatika. Janetta goes into the fight, as her men are far outnumbered, and she wants to encourage them. She is slightly injured, and when she gains consciousness, she finds that Geddes, the Cheevers, and her brother have learned of her plan and followed her to Katalak, arriving just in time to save the day for the Northern Star. Barney is then presented as J. Barnaby Hoyt, Jr., and Janetta invites all her mining friends to her wedding in the store in Katalak.

The Talleyrand Maxim

By J. S. Fletcher

Character of Story: Crime.

Theme: Ambition.

Characters: Linford Pratt, young attorney; Antony Bartle, book dealer; Eldrick, solicitor, Pratt's employer; Bartle Collingwood, solicitor and nephew of Bartle; James Parrawhite, law clerk; Byner, a detective; Esther Mawson, a maid; Mrs. Richard Mallathorpe, owner of the Grange; Harper Mallathorpe, her son; Nesta Mallathorpe, her daughter; Reuben Murgatroyd.

The Plot: Linford Pratt is an ambitious and unscrupulous young lawyer in an English provincial city. He is alone in the office of his employer when a client, an old book-dealer calls and dies suddenly in the office, after telling Pratt of a will left by old Mallathorpe—who was supposed to have died intestate and whose property went to a cousin, Mrs. Richard Mallathorpe and her children. Under the will, which the dealer found in the pocket of a book bought of the estate, these people would inherit only thirty thousand pounds and the rest of the estate would go to the city for educational endowments. Pratt steals the will and blackmails Mrs. Mallathorpe into promising him a life stewardship at the estate for concealing the fact that a will exists. Parrawhite tells Pratt he was hidden in the office when the will was stolen and that he must be counted in on the deal. They quarrel. Pratt strikes Parrawhite and accidentally kills him. He conceals the body in a shaft full of water in a quarry. Mrs. Mallathorpe plans to do away with Pratt. Collingwood arrives to take charge of his uncle's affairs, falls in love with Nesta Mallathorpe who does not like Pratt. He nearly stumbles on Pratt's secret but just misses it. Mrs. Mallathorpe writes Pratt to come to see her by way of an unsafe bridge which she has on her property and which she feels sure will not hold him. Pratt arrives at the bridge in time to see young Mallathorpe fall through the bridge and be killed. Mrs. Mallathorpe now gives Pratt a power of attorney to act for her in all affairs. Nesta is much upset by the fact that Pratt is running things and demands an explanation. Her mother refuses it. Nesta confronts Pratt and he tells her that he has a double hold on her mother. He tells her if she goes to the police he will ruin the whole family. She tells Eldrick. Eldrick hears from a firm in London who are searching for Parrawhite who has been left a legacy. Alarmed, Pratt bribes Murgatroyd, a poor jeweler who books steamer passages on the side, to say that he sold a passage to America to Parrawhite. Detectives visit Murgatroyd and, alarmed, he admits that this is a lie. A search is made and Parrawhite's body is found. Pratt determines to flee after raising more money from Mrs. Mallathorpe. He goes to her house and is drugged by his tool, Esther Mawson, a maid. Esther Mawson blackmails Mrs. Mallathorpe who buys the will and immediately destroys it, then giving the alarm and having the maid arrested. Pratt, trapped, commits suicide. Nesta refuses to continue on the estate and marries Collingwood.

The Coast of Opportunity

By Page Phillips

Character of Story: Mexican adventure.

Theme: Fight for a mine.

Characters: Dick Bristow; Julian Marr, president of the South Eastern Railway Co.; Sylvia Marr, his daughter; Wade Farrand, his secretary; De Boer, president of De Boer Exploration Co.; Jose Cripo, Bristow's friend; Rosita, a Mexican girl; Pepe, a bandit.

The Plot: Dick Bristow is left at his father's death the owner of some worthless property in Mexico; land which is under water and bought by his father of swindlers. Under pressure from the United States Government, the promotors of the scheme buy up some other land and substitute it for that originally deeded to their victims. Dick gets some of this and goes to it intending to cultivate it agriculturally. He finds that he has no means of shipping his product and applies to the president of the South Eastern to run a branch line to his property, promising a certain amount of capital for the project. The railway, however, refuses to guarantee what the freight rates will be, so the project falls through. Dick discovers that some land on a neighboring mountain, owned by his friend Cripo contains valuable iron ore. He obtains an option on this property and also on an adjoining piece owned jointly by Marr and Janet Ashley. Marr has sold this to Janet's father at an exorbitant price but now that he has a chance to sell it tries to persuade her to let him buy out her interest for a small sum. Bristow, who has met her, advises her not to do this. Bristow secures the backing of De Boer of the De Boer Exploration Company for a railway to be run to the mountain as soon as he obtains possession of it. Farrand, the secretary of Marr, believing that Janet will make a good deal of money out of the property if she hangs onto it, makes love to her and becomes engaged to her. Marr learns of the existence of the ore in the mountain and is anxious to defeat Bristow's intention of buying it. He also brings his influence to bear in Washington to prevent the granting of a railway franchise to De Boer. Marr instructs Farrand to see that Bristow does not have the opportunity of exercising his option and as the time draws near learning that Bristow has the necessary money to buy in the property, Farrand has Bristow waylaid by bandits and made a prisoner. They fail to find the option upon him, however. Pepe, the leader of the bandits, being absent, three of them fall asleep and Bristow overcomes the fourth who is killed in the struggle. Bristow escapes. Farrand gives orders that he be shot on sight. He is overtaken and wounded but again escapes. Marr again attempts to buy out Janet but Farrand warns her not to sell. De Boer gets a message from Jose regarding Bristow's disappearance and appears on the scene in time to claim the option which he has with him, this having been assigned to him through the bank. Marr threatens to kill De Boer but cannot refuse to accept the money. Bristow feels that he has cheated Janet and to atone for this makes her his heir. Farrand, finding she will make little out of her property is glad to be released from his engagement. Bristow and Janet are married.

The Plot: Jack Lennon is traveling in Arizona, along a lonely trail, when a bullet drills a hole in his hat. He drops beside his burro and a second bullet kills the animal. He fires at a puff of smoke and no more bullets come. While he is investigating a young girl on a pony arrives. She tells him he has encountered Apaches. She offers to take him to her father's place near the mine for which he is hunting. They start and are pursued by Indians. Lennon is bitten by a Gila monster saving Carmena from it. They arrive at her place and he finds that she lives in cliff dwellings with her father and foster sister The father is in league with outlaws—cattle thieves and renegade Indians. One of these Indians, Cochise, wants to marry Elsie, the little sister. So also does Slade, the white leader of the outlaws. Lennon offers to divide his share of the reward he will receive for locating the old copper mine of which he is in search to get Slade to agree to leave the girl until the mine has been found. Lennon finds that in spite of himself he distrusts Carmena, who seems to be in league with the two villains. He heeds certain apparent signals between them and begins thiinking that she lured him to the place to do away with him. He finds the other girl very sweet and pretty and thinks that he has fallen in love with her. She tells him that she loves him. He starts off in search of the mine with Slade and has some thrilling experiences. After the discovery of the mine Slade stakes out Lennon with a rawhide thong near a rattlesnake to make him agree to make his report and collect the reward at once, Lennon having declared that he would not do so until assured that the girls would be sent safely away. Lennon manages to kill the snake and is carried on a prisoner. They arrive at the cliffs to find an attack upon the cliff dwellings in progress. Cochise is attacking. Lennon offers to help Slade defend the place. He is freed. They drive off the Apaches and enter the dwellings. There Slade again takes command and declares he will wait no longer for Elsie. The father, Farley, awakes from his drunken stupor long enough to shoot Slade through the shoulder and is shot and killed for his pains. Carmena and Jack descend the cliff and pretend to join forces with Cochise. They help him into the house and Slade is wounded. Cochise and his men are lured to the cellar where they are blown up with dynamite. Slade is killed in the general fight. Elsie recovers her memory, lost since the time she was captured by Cochise as a child and turned over to Farley to bring up. Lennon realizes that it is Carmena whom he loves.

Tessie of Rainbow Glen

By Seward W. Hopkins

Character of Story: Western.

Theme: Love.

Characters: Brixton Rice, college man; Cooner, ranchman; Mrs. Cooner, his wife; Tessie of "Rainbow," a waif, adopted daughter of the Cooners; Howard Dowie, friend of Rice; Stanger, leader of the cattle thieves; Mrs. Stanger, his wife; Hank Tintle, his successor; cowboys, college men, sheriff, cattle thieves, etc.

The Plot: Brixton Rice, disappointed in a love affair, goes West to seek his fortune. He arrives on the scene in the opening of the story just when a young cowboy is having an altercation with two other men over a bull. Rice takes the part of the young fellow, and in the melee which follows, shoots and kills one of the assailants. When he comes to he finds that the young cowboy is really a girl—Tessie, who is dressed in a man's outfit. She tells him that the strangers were cattle thieves trying to steal the bull. As for herself, there is no record of her parentage and that she is called Tessie because there was a "T" marked on her clothes. She is called Rainbow also because she was found by a rainbow falls. She brings Rice back to the ranch of her foster parents where he recovers from his wound. Rice finds that Cooner is having a struggle with the cattle thieves which practically amounts to a feud. He sends East for half a dozen of his college friends and, appointed manager of the ranch, undertakes to clean Rattlesnake Hollow of its bad men. Many encounters follow which culminate in the stealing of Tessie by the cattle thieves. A search is made for her and word finally comes that the girl has been found dead—with her face crushed beyond recognition but she is identified by her clothing. When Rice sees her he declares that it must be some other person, for the dead woman has a wen on her neck which did not belong to Tessie. Stanger is found murdered in his house and as Rice had been heard to threaten him, Rice is arrested for the crime, charged with murder. Tessie is found, dressed in men's clothing and wandering about the prairie. She has apperently lost her memory. Rice sends to Chicago for his lawyer and, being rich, is able to produce bail for himself and the other members of his party who have been lodged in jail as accessories to the murder of Stanger. The trial comes on and at the last moment Tessie, who has meanwhile recovered her memory testifies that she was carried off by Stanger and taken to his house where his wife drugged her and took away her clothing. When she recovered she heard an argument on the floor below and that she saw Hank Tintle murder Stanger and his wife and carry away the body of the wife who was dressed in Tessie's clothes. Tessie and Rice are betrothed.

Locale: Western cattle town.

Picture High Lights: There are some loose ends in this story. Tessie's real parentage is never established. The story also needs a complication or two in the love affair.

The Iron Furrow

By George C. Shedd

Character of Story: Western.

Theme: Perseverance.

Characters: Lee Bryant, civil engineer; Ruth Garland and Imogene Martin, home steaders; Stevenson, a rancher; Graham, a rancher; Lucile, his daughter; Menocal, a Mexican banker; Charley, his son; Winship, the sheriff; Joe Garcia, a tool of Menocal's; Alvoraz, a Mexican; Pat Carrigan, contractor;, Gretzinger, an Eastern financier representing bondholders.

The Plot: Lee Bryant, while talking with two girl homesteaders at a stream, is asked to bring water to an automobile bearing a white girl, one white man and two prosperous Mexicans, both half breeds or part Indian. The driver, a young Mexican throws a quarter to Bryant which Bryant throws back at him. The driver turns out to be Charley Menocal. Bryant buys a ranch of Stevenson which the latter has bought of Menocal and which is mortgaged to the banker Stevenson was swindled in the deal but Bryant knows that certain water rights attached to the property which, it developed, will make it very worth while. He trades a farm in Nebraska for the ranch. It is necessary for him to build a canal. The Menocals try in every way to interfere with his work and Charley stoops to many underhanded deeds to block Bryant's plans. Bryant calls upon the two girl homesteaders and falls in love with Ruth Garland, chiefly because he is lonely and she is lively. They become engaged. He soon finds, however, that she is not particularly interested in him and she goes about with Charley Menocal. Bryant secures the co-operation of Pat Carrigan, contractor, in making his canal. He has formed his ranch into a stock company and sold bonds through a banking house to raise capital. A man named Gretzinger is sent out to represent the bondholders. It is the intention to resell the land to small farmers when the irrigation project is carried through. Gretzinger wishes Bryant to use wood instead of concrete in making the dams on his canal but this Bryant refuses to do. Gretzinger tries to work upon Bryant through Ruth and incidentally makes love to Ruth. Bryant warns him to stop this but it goes on without his knowledge. Charley Menocal bribes Alvarez to tamper with the dams. He does not consult his father in this respect. Bryant finds that he gets more sympathy and understanding from Louise Graham than from Ruth and finally discovers that he really loves Louise and that she loves him, but is determined to carry out his word with Ruth. Ruth shows plainly that she cares less for Bryant's honor than for his financial success. An attempt is made through the courts to stop the building of the canal with the result that it must be finished in ninety days or not at all. The work is rushed by Carrigan and Bryant. Bryant runs short of money and Gretzinger offers to buy him out for a small sum. Bryant refuses. Carrigan then offers to put up the necessary money to carry things through. Louise proves herself a heroine in nursing some men injured through a plot of Charley's. A big storm breaks and the project is apparently doomed. Ruth elopes with Gretzinger and Bryant is left free to marry Louise in his hour of success.

Janet of the Kootenay

By Evah McKowan

Character of Story: Western.

Theme: Independence.

Characters: Janet Kirk; Peter Gordon; Captain Fenton; Mr. Mortimer-Deane; Mrs. Mortimer-Deane, other neighbors too numerous to detail.

The Plot: This story has a very slight plot. It is largely made up of incidents and comments upon conditions in Northwestern Canada during the war. It is in no sense a story of the frontier country, treating of the country as it really is today, or was during the late war. Janet Kirk goes West from Toronto and buys a fruit farm in the Kootenay Valley which she develops, setting up housekeeping on eighty acres of wild land. "Arcady," as her farm is called, develops rapidly and so does her romance with a retired British army officer who has been invalided home with a D.S.O. and a stiff knee. This romance is detailed in a series of letters to a girl friend in the East. There are many interesting characters in the story and an abundance of incidents, largely humorous, together with discussions of every possible sort of matter of interest to the people in Northwestern Canada, from politics of the Dominion to the conduct of the war and the proper method of growing peas. These incidents are handled deftly and would no doubt, be of great assistance in making a working scenario of the story. In its present form it presents a good character study in the person of Janet, but is lacking in suspense and plot. It is not in the least melodramatic and the great number of people introduced into the story detract from the reader's interest in the main characters. Characters come wandering in and out of the tale much as they used to do in the old English three volume novels; when they come you wonder what they are going to do and when they go you wonder how they got in at all. It makes entertaining reading but lacks continuity.

Locale: Kootenay Valley.

Picture High Lights: Would need a great deal of touching up.

Last Week We Met—Wm. Roy Mott

William Roy Mott

VERY often one runs across men who are, to use a colloquial expression, "wrapped up in their work." More often than not such men are apt, very apt, to live their work so thoroughly that when they talk about it to others their conversation becomes boresome.

But Wm. Roy Mott is not of this kind. Although we would say offhand that his work means more than anything else to him with the single exception of his charming family, yet his descriptions of experiments and results are so interesting as to nearly reach the plane of fictional writings.

Nothing would be more interesting than a casual tale of Dr. Mott's various achievements and, may we say, near achievements. As an example of the former class consider the wonderful white A. C. Special Carbon; in the latter class, we might place his work on the solar motor.

Dr. Mott has taught in state universities, experimented on various electro-chemical processes in the plants at Niagara Falls, worked with others on plans to harness the rays of Old Sol to do work for mankind, and has now settled down in the research laboratory of the National Carbon Company to discover and perfect such important items as the carbon referred to above.

His is the kind of work that is never finished and never gets into a rut. That which he works out today as a wonder will be replaced tomorrow by an even more valuable device.

Mr. Mott has made a number of invaluable contributions to the various technical societies, including the American Society of Chemical Engineers and the S. M. P. E. His researches in the field of the flaming arc have been widely discussed and quoted as authoritative. He has studied the relative volitability of various metals with a view to their use as arc lamp terminals. In his laboratory he has arranged a simple apparatus by which he is enabled to observe the effect of chemicals alone or in combination when placed in one pole or the other of an electric arc. We can not conceive of a more instructive hour than one spent in this laboratory observing the behaviour of substances when introduced into the temperature of an arc.

Nor has his inventions stopped with those related. In fact they comprise a list of considerable length. Electroplating is one of the electro-chemical processes which have been favored with attention by Mott. During the recent printers' strike in New York City the novel method by which the Literary Digest was able to publish its issues had been worked out several years previously by Dr. Mott.

Mr. Mott's case is an excellent example of applying unusual inventive genius to practical, commercial processes.

LEWIS SWAAB, the De Luxe Supply Man of Philly, says he has put in the equipment at the new Manheim theatre, Germantown Avenue and Manheim Street, including two Sixplexes, a Superlite screen and a Fort Wayne motor generator set.

DURING THE last month we have had the pleasure of receiving many British agents who are in this country buying projection, studio and laboratory equipment. The English Bull-dog is evidently making a heavy bid for the M. P. business.

Released next week—First Episode in new serial having to do with the housing and equipment of photoplays. Watch for it.

Earl Rossman, chief cinematographer with the Prizma expedition to Africa, has returned home somewhat ahead of the rest of the party. Rossman reports some wonderful pictures in colors and also some unusual black-and-white stuff. Naturally the expedition had some narrow escapes and many trying experiences all of which will be made known at the right time.

Ross himself looks fit and fine even though he has but lately recovered from an attack of jungle fever. According to him all the Prizma men are coming back none the worse for the trip although they were quite near the ill-fated Universal expedition when the latter came to grief.

If you haven't read the descriptive story of the new "Rotary" machine on page 1111 do it now. And afterwards we will agree with your belief that it doesn't look as if it would work. That's what we thought until we saw it project—after which our doubt vanished. It throws as pretty a picture as any man would want. And the proof of any machine is the screen.

Then there is the fourth installment of William Barbarin Laub's article on "Camera." No one who ever expects to be interested in M. P. cameras can afford to miss this series. There are so many variable factors in the cameraman's duties that it is a tough task for any cinematographer to put rules on paper. But even so, we think Laub has succeeded remarkably well.

Latest Addition to Portable Machines Reveals Novel Departures from Usual Mechanisms

The latter mechanism and [illegible] e for many years been employed [illegible] ard theatrical projectors and the [illegible] produce the intermittent motion [illegible]

But the inventors of the "Rotary" had a new ea. They proposed to employ a scheme where[illegible] would be set in motion by a device [illegible] d its pressure over a considerable [illegible] of the film strip instead of through the igency of sprocket teeth and perforations. In heir plan the sprocket holes would be used for eeding of film but not for producing the inter[illegible]tent motion. In this way there could be no [illegible] on the perforations and the possibility of [illegible]tured films would be practically eliminated. [illegible] much experimentation they succeeded in ac[illegible] what they set out to do and in a man[illegible] proved to be entirely practicable. The [illegible] the only portable machine incorpo[illegible] rotary presser."

At this point in the travel of the film, the machine departs from the standard projector. After passing through the gate the film strip runs under the "rotary presser" up and over an idler, then under the framing device and finally to the take-up reel in the lower compartment.

In operation the film is fed continuously to the upper part of the gate. The take-up draws the film tightly along the under-side of the presser. From here on, the action is as simple as could be imagined. The presser works continuously. First the toe of the mechanism (where the holes are seen) engages the film by pressing the latter along its edges. Half a cycle later the heel of the presser relieves the toe from its duty and takes up the slack in the celluloid strip.

Suppose the machine is about to start and that the presser is in the position shown in Fig. 1. As the motor turns the driving shaft, the toe of the presser bears down upon the film. The latter cannot be drawn back since it is held by the sprocket. There is nothing for the film to do but to be drawn down through the gate by the pull of the presser. At the end of its travel the presser has passed the vertical position and the heel engages with the film and takes up the slack as the toe releases it.

The rotary presser has been designed in the correct proportion to insure a movement of the film equivalent to four sprocket holes or one frame. Once these dimensions have been established there is no way by which the extent of the pull-down can be any less or any greater. This does away with chances of unsteady pictures.

In framing a picture, the framing device, working similar to an idler, is changed in position and the travel of the film during the next cycle is increased or decreased according to the need. As a

It is an interesting fact to consider that there is nothing about the presser movement to wear and cause trouble. In fact, as the presser is it acquires a polish which is more of a help a disadvantage. Since it has no moving pa requires no oil except that which is applie the bevel gear driving it. As a result there opportunity for oil to work its way along on to the film.

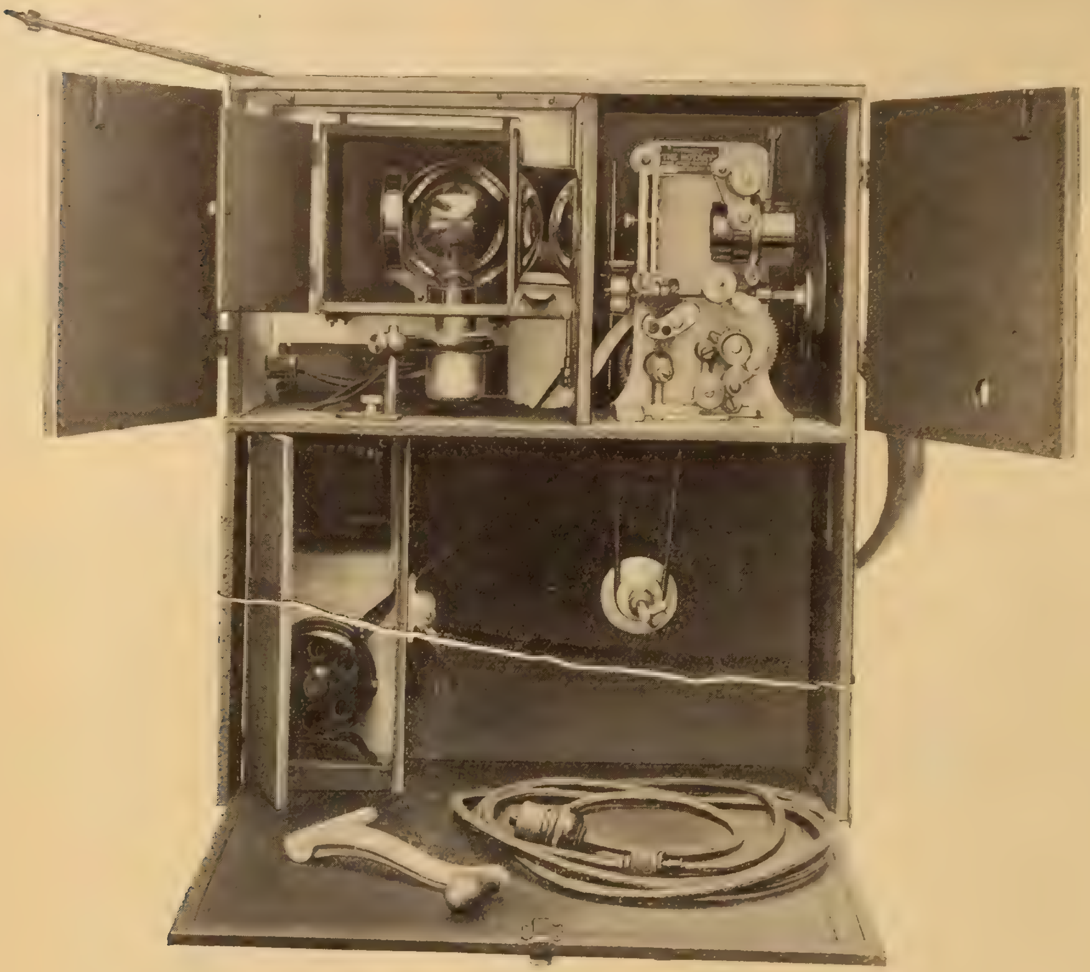

Fig. 2—Rotary Projector complete

There is little that need be said on the re der of the projector. Its illumination is ade for all purposes for which it would be used 400 watt incandescent lamp with reflector i light source. Two plano convex condensers, in diameter and a spirally focused objective up the optical system. A two wing flicker sh is used and, as has been said before, does not c the annoysome flicker so common with most case machines. Protection from the heat of light source is assured by a gravity controlled, trifugally actuated fire-shutter.

But the only criterion of a portable machin in the case of a standard machine, is the pic it projects on the screen. The "Rotary" acc plishes its mission in regal style. The pictu projects to the screen is clear, free from ob tionable flicker, steady and of desirable brillia A projector needs no better recommendation.

the arc. That is, it would be possible to strike a 30-ampere arc with 1" carbons and by being careful you could probably maintain the arc stream, but for projection purposes the light source being small and underheated, would be useless.

Your present rectifier is a 30-ampere equipment. With the proper primary voltage you can derive 30 amperes and still get a decent life from your tube. An overload could be given the tube but this would cause the temperature to rise which would most surely have a very bad effect on its life. If you want more light, arrange to get another rectifier set of 40 or 50 amp. capacity but do not "squeeze the sponge" dry by trying to get these currents from your present set. We have just said to get another rectifier, but that was merely to emphasize a point. If you feel the need of better illumination get a motor generator set. Even the manufacturers of mercury tubes would almost be frank enough to tell you that the mercury arc for projection purposes is out of style.

Another little point. Why are you using that ⅝" carbon set. With 30 amperes you should be using a ⅝" upper and not larger than a ½" solid in the lower jaw. Perhaps your wrong carbon combination is the cause of your poor light. Get the right size and give your rectifier a new chance.

W. G. Francke Is Guest at Annual Election Local 182

TUESDAY night, January 6th, last, proved a gala one for the members of Boston Motion Picture Operators Union No. 182, for besides casting their ballots at their Annual Election a banquet of no mean proportions was also slated. So following the showing of the "good-night" slide in the numerous houses throughout the Boston jurisdiction the pathways led to Pilgrim Hall, 694 Washington Street, where outside of the regular assembly hall a real banquet scene was staged.

William C. Francke, Sales Director of Precision Machine Co.

An account of the gathering has been given by William C. Francke, sales and publicity director of the Simplex Company, who was an interested visitor at the affair. Mr. Francke was for six years the business and legislative representative of the Boston Local and served with the majority of the newly elected officers in the earlier years of the Union's existence. According to Mr. Francke's report, one of the most harmonious elections in the life of this famous local had passed into history after it had been announced that Thad. Barrows, a charter member, who became famous for his activities in driving the many fake operators' schools out of Boston with the help of the District Attorney's office, had been elected the new President. Mr. Barrows for the first five years of the union istence was also its treasurer. Arthur Gray, u sally well liked was elected Vice-President, Joseph Rosen, a pioneer of the early Frank Hc days, is the new Treasurer, while Albert Mo who has held the financial secretary's office fc past four years, was re-elected.

The most talked-of event of the election r which is certain to meet with favor of both in the industry as well as in labor circles wa election as Business Agent of James F. B who is also a charter member, as well as the president during the local's first five years of activities.

Boston Local No. 182 was chartered in M 1910 and is considered one of the banner l in the I. A. T. S. E., having stood at all time progressive and humane legislation, and muc the favorable legislation enacted by the law ma of Massachusetts relative to the exhibition of tion pictures in the Bay State was due to th terest shown by the members of Local No. 1

Mr. Francke took advantage of his visit to Bc to renew many old friendships and extend personal New Year's greeting to his nume friends and well-wishers in the labor and mc picture fields.

ON LOCATION

There are times when it is necessary to do interior work with no artificial lights, for perhaps the "location" is not wired with current of sufficient voltage to use any kind of arcs if you had them. No kind of incandescent light is really suitable for motion picture photography. High voltage lamps with blue globes to kill the red rays of the light have been tried, but these would only be of help to you in close-up work. Under such conditions unless it is possible to throw reflected light with mirrors, one must resort to slow turning in order to get exposure. Then the utmost care must be observed by your subjects to make their actions, if any, as slow as possible unless dark, underlighted scenes are wanted. Then, one might turn at normal speed in a fairly well lighted room or other interior. When turning slowly and exposing for poor light conditions, no window or open doorway can be included in your picture, else it will be badly overexposed, for you are exposing to get subjects that are in poor light. This holds true of windows in sets on outdoor stages, for while you have light enough under the diffusing cloths to fully illuminate your stage, you will usually be working with far too large a stop for the bright sunlight on the other side of the window or open door.

In such cases, the windows must be backed with foliage to kill the brilliant light. In still photography you can be fairly well guided by rules for indoor work such as:

Bright walls and several windows
BRIGHT SUN OUTSIDE	2 sec.
HAZY SUN OUTSIDE	5 sec.

But with the motion picture camera, there is no such fond mother to guide you.

As a general thing it is possible to get a picture as long as the illumination from your subject (to speak photographically) on your focusing screen is of sufficient strength to enable you to clearly see detail, but when your ground glass seems very dark, no matter how bright the light in the room appears to the eye, don't try it.

Your lens will never lie to you, and when you become accustomed to gauging the amount of illumination on your focusing screen, you will always be sure of your exposure.

The writer has always considered exterior work more exacting than studio work, but this is a matter of opinion. Certainly, one meets all sorts and conditions of light out of doors, and hardly ever works twice under exactly the same conditions. Often, too, a continuance of bad weather will necessitate shooting scenes with bad and indifferent light because the production is behind schedule.

It is suggested that a good exposure meter be a part of a cameraman's equipment, for it is sometimes of great help to the most experienced men. Old-timers will smile and look very superior when they see you pull out a meter and begin figuring from the thing, but the only bad thing that can be said of the practice is that it is like constant use of a dictionary. After a while you might have to depend on the thing. But more often you learn how to spell. A very efficient and reliable meter on the market is a celluloid instrument which can be set for any light conditions in any part of the world, at any season of the year and at any time of the day.

Partly because no handbook on the subject of photography is complete without some kind of an exposure chart, the writer has compiled table on page —— which is based on his o notes and observations and on several differ types of meters. But it has its limitations, course, and while reliable, is intended merely a guide for photographers of limited experien

It is based on flat illumination and side lighti so it would be necessary to use a larger st than the chart calls for when photographing wi the sun in front of the camera. On exteri work, the photographer should make constant u of reflectors to soften shadows and light up fac when blacklighting scenes and wherever there a heavy shadows. The following table gives tl percentage of light reflected by various mediun though the figures are merely approximate.

Mirror	95
Aluminum paint	87
White blotting paper	82
Ordinary white paper	70
Newspapers	50 to 60
Yellow wall paper (clean)	40
Blue paper	25
Brown paper	13
Chocolate paper	4
Black paper or cloth (dull)	1
Black velvet	0

This table is interesting if only to illustrate the absor tion of light by various objects and explains the use black velvet when some portion of the film is not to b exposed, as in making double exposures, etc.

Out on location, the lens hood becomes mor important than ever and there are often time when this must be supplemented either by a adjustable sunshade mounted on a movable arn in front of the camera or by anything else t keep the direct rays of the sun off the lens. I is possible to shoot directly at the sun when i is low enough to see both it and the horizon o the focusing screen and moonlight effects ar sometimes secured in this way. Exposure shoul be made (in clear weather) with full shutte opening, a No. 3 ray filter (when sun is stil bright) and about f6.3—f8 stop. But no rule ca be laid down for such work. Experiment and make tests. As a general thing moonlight and sunset effects are best made with the sun behind a small cloud or hidden by some object as a tree, when no ray filter is needed.

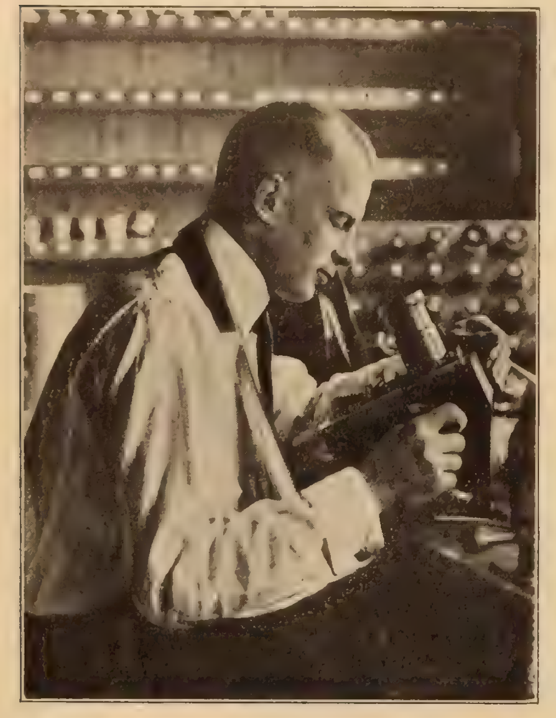
Blanchard Invents New Machine

DUDLEY T. BLANCHARD, Superintendent of the Cutting Room and Laboratories of the National Film Corporation's Production plant in Hollywood, has just completed the ingenious invention of a director's film inspection machine which promises unlimited possibilities of usefulness in the motion picture industry.

The machine is used in the cutting room for the purpose of matching long shots and close-ups and for the proper placing of titles without the necessity of leaving the cutting table and projecting the picture upon the screen.



Dudley Blanchard using the special cutting projector which he invented

Experts who have examined the invention declare that by this comparatively simple device the time required for the editing of a film can be reduced one-third to one-half and also making it unnecessary ever to change the placement of a title.

A number of different machines have been made and tried out for this purpose but all have proved inadequate. Blanchard's device, with its electrical attachments, renders the work rapid, accurate and practical.

"Daddy" Daley, one of the first camera men in the profession, built the machine under the supervision of the inventor.

Young Blanchard, who, by the way, is the son of F. W. Blanchard of this city, has already applied for patents in the United States and Europe.

French Camera Record Nothing New

MOTION pictures taken at the rate of 50,000 a second as a report from France last week chronicled, is by no means a new triumph in cinematography, according to Early Emlay, inventor of the new Stereospeed motion picture camera, and perhaps America's greatest authority on high speed photography. In fact, says Mr. Emley, American laboratories long ago photographed objects under the same circumstances mentioned in the French cable, and, if not at so great a speed, could easily have duplicated and surpassed it. Several laboratories are right now equipped to be able to reach a speed of 100,000 photographs a second, he adds.

In discussing the French experiment, Mr. Emlay said: "While the report that French scientists have performed a mechanism possible of making 50,000 photographs a second might center a new record along these lines, the method used is based upon an old theory: that of exposing a continuous strip of highly sensitized negative by mean intermittent light sparks which are set in a t dark room.

"Experiments of this kind have been success carried out in many of our own colleges here i United States. An example of this sort of pl graphy was displayed here several years ag Pathe, one showing a bullet leaving a gun entering a four-inch plank.

"If my recollection is correct, the Pathe posure was made at the rate of 15,000 pictu second, but I was told by Mr. Zecca, then tech director for Pathe in France, that they could easily made double that amount of exposure they so constructed the contact wheel (which the frequency of light) to a greater degree.

"The method used in making these high s pictures is rather simple. A large drum is ployed over which is belted a strip of neg This passes before an aperture in front of whi a lens. With this drum layers of brass are s the proper intervals by a proper insulation brush or contact point is connected with a h actinic light in front of the lens and control intermittency, or light flash, because of the pa over from one brass leaf to the insulation.

"This method is not of a general use by re of the fact that the actinic light produce described is not powerful enough for an exte illumination and must be confined to small o and a dark room exposure."

Signs of Striking Contrast

Oplex Signs are signs of striking contrast —raised snow-white letters on a dark background in the daytime, at night solid outlined, clean-cut letters of light standing out from the darkness.

This means an Oplex Sign has maximum pulling power twenty-four hours a day, that it is a sign that can't be missed and that it will lend an atmosphere of distinctive refinement to any show house.

Another reason for choosing an Oplex Sign is that you can take advantage of Oplex interchangeable unit letters—the regular Oplex characters mounted on metal panels of uniform size, so the sign can be changed at will; it only takes a few minutes. All that is necessary is to take out one set of letters and put in another. No wiring to change.

Full information in regard to Oplex Signs and Oplex Interchangeable Unit Signs will be sent upon request. Also a sketch showing how your sign will look.

The Fotoplayer Well Adapted to Theatres

THE musical requirements of theatres vary from the piano and violin, or trap drummer, through the average small theatre orchestra, up to the full symphony requirements of motion picture palaces.

From the efforts to meet the musical necessities of small theatres, with a single instrument, the pipe organ was installed, either frankly, under its own name or as a "unit orchestra" giving the mesmeric impression of suggested qualities it did not always contain.

The American Photo Player Company, Manufacturers of the Famous "Fotoplayer" recognizing the Exhibitor's valuation of the greater importance of music, for recitals and interpretative qualities, conceived and successfully built and installed the "Robert-Morton Orchestral Organ."

The number of these instruments used in the better class of theatres has justified the tonal and mechanical qualities of the Robert-Morton from an artistic and engineering standpoint.

With all their capabilities, the smaller Robert-Morton instruments are no more difficult to handle than the Fotoplayer, nor are the larger ones, except that a wider knowledge of orchestration is required to use intelligently the wealth of orchestral tone provided—which is the same as saying that it takes a better man to conduct a forty-piece symphony orchestra than the average Theatre Conductor, who may be perfectly at home with eight or ten pieces.

Standardization and factory management have permitted immediate availability for delivery of these organs and they are built in such form that it will be possible to install them in the average theatre, without the extensive and frequently expensive rebuilding operation which has usually been necessary to accommodate a theatre organ.

The power and versatility of a symphony orchestra in all its majestic grandeur is faithfully reproduced—not only by the tone of the individual instruments represented, but by the wonderful interpretation of combinations of groups of instruments under the absolute control of one player, who finds himself in the position of a Conductor with the advantage that he possesses the ability to execute the music before him in strict accordance with his own interpretation and without the element of fallibility, including diverse temperaments and inattention on the part of a number of orchestral players.

Reserved Seats $2.20

"RESERVE SEATS $2.20"! You can hear this announcement practically every day in the lobby of the Capitol theatre, Broadway and Fifty-first street, New York City.

I often heard it and was under the impression that it is nothing but fictitious advertising. After all the Capitol is only a motion picture theatre, so I made up my mind to cease being an exterior spectator and investigate the matter.

I paid my "$2.20," saw and heard a beautiful show. Two weeks later I saw the same picture at a down town theatre for 20c, including the war tax. Mr. Exhibitor, for $2.20, I saw and heard; for 20c I only saw things. Please get this: I had to pay $2.00 for hearing things.

What are your patrons hearing? "Candy! Ice Cream! Chocolate!" or a musical program in keeping with the action and atmosphere of the entire show? Of course not everybody can afford to employ Symphony Orchestras, but the least you can do is to try and be better than your neighbor. All these common nickel reminiscences can easily be eliminated. Every exhibitor can build in miniature what a big fellow in the big town is building in reality.

Competition in business is the greater factor than necessity, in encouraging new inventions in the life of a nation. Competition is the only factor able to create such institutions as the Capitol, Rialto, Rivoli, and Strand of New York City, N. Y., Grauman's, of Los Angeles, Cal., and many other monuments of modern showmanship. But this is no reason why exhibitors should resign to phlegmatic sameness in localities where competition is not a factor. There are other things of sufficient importance to encourage men to create and build. For your own satisfaction, and as a human being, it is your duty to live up to the trend of modernism. The maintenance of the old nickel picture system only stumps the growth of the vine sensibilities that slowly but surely will predominate the present generation, and all those exhibitors not keeping in step with the progressive development of their patrons will soon find themselves among the "have beens" of their profession. The same formula applies to every branch of life. Keep it up or take a back seat. I admit that the picture is the center of attraction, but take the most beautiful diamond, its the setting that makes it desirable and attractive.

Mr. Exhibitor, the best piece of meat can be served in the form of hash. How are you serving your patrons? —THE EDITOR.

Sam Fox Novelties

THERE is no necessity of dwelling upon the fact that the Sam Fox publications established themselves as indispensable to musicians who are striving to appropriately accompany pictures.

The editor of these columns has only one criticism regarding Sam Fox publications, and that is, there are not enough of these excellent numbers published. Five numbers recently added to their catalog follow:

"Dancing Nymphs," by Brane, a 2/4 Allegro Moderato Intermezzo which is in the strictest sense of the word musically representing what its title implies.

"Love Letters," by Jackson, a charming Moderato Concert waltz, one of those numbers which should be in the library of every progressive musician. There are many waltzes on the market but very few have animato movements and can be synchronized to action of the picture without destroying its musical value. "Love Letters" fully responds to the above.

"Devotion," by Deppen. The name of Deppen coupled with the standard of Sam Fox should really be sufficient to induce every musician to avail

Organ Supremacy

The successful introduction of the Robert-Morton Organ in the higher class theatres throughout the country has justified the genius of its builders.

The Robert-Morton Organ combines the majestic grandeur of the Pipe Organ with the variety of tone color produced by a full Symphony Orchestra—the ideal combination of musical expression for picture accompaniment.

Organists playing the Robert-Morton praise its unique construction, scientific blending of tone and ease of operation, enabling the performer to be in absolute harmony with the mood and action of the story.

Exhibitors interested in the economic feature of their music will find the Robert-Morton equally successful for solo work and its ability in filling out an orchestra.

"Too Much Johnson"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

"TOO Much Johnson" betokens William Gillette. The power to weave an extraordi- rily complicated plot makes this a comedy above e average in rapid occurrence of hilariously unny scenes and in the judicious use of a few haracters. The hero allows the meddling mother- law to figuratively hang herself by giving her oo much rope. In this instance the marriage con- act with a fire-eating Mexican ranch owner, hich the mother-in-law thinks is a deed and in- sts on signing, may be cited as provoking mirth om any audience.

Adele Farrington is good as the Mother-in-law nd Monte Blue as Breezy, the young friend of e hero. Elsie Lorimer's work is also worthy of ote.—CHARLOTTE DANTZIG.

"Luck of the Irish"

(Mayflower–Dwan Production—6700 Feet)

AN interesting melodrama with worlds of action and a speedy advancing plot, bright- ned by clever comedy situations and witty sub- tles. The interest grows from the clever intro- uction of an Irish plumber's romance with a hool teacher and through nearly seven reels the spense is well maintained. The story opens ith the plumber watching feet pass his basement hop window in New York, and then, through a ook's tour taking in Venice, Cairo, Singapore and ongkong, gives opportunity for a big variety of onderful settings and a wide range of thrilling xperiences, none of which are overdone.

James Kirkwood is great as Grogan, the umber, and should continue as an actor instead f directing. Ward Crane, the heavy, a newcomer the screen; Anna Q. Nilsson and Harry North- up, are the other principals of a convincing cast.

"Luck of the Irish" proved to be one of the ree most popular features shown at Grauman's, ith the week's receipts greatest to date.—CARL ESSON.

"Two Weeks"

(First National)

CONSTANCE TALMADGE has a light and frothy bit of entertainment in "Two Weeks," ut it makes good entertainment for the "tired usiness man" and anyone else who doesn't wish think. Also it has been spiced up with some idnight bathing in a quiet lake in which Constance permitted to pose in a one-piece bit of bathing oods.

The story is not original but the role is one in hich the star appears at her best. She is a saucy nd pert chorus girl who means nothing wrong with her frivolities. A wealthy young aristocrat becomes violently enamoured and Constance tolerates him because of his influence with the theatrical world. He backs her in a play and she becomes a star. His violent advances cause her to flee from his estate and by chance she enters the home of three bachelors, two old and out of the running and the third a cynic. Of course she unconsciously wins him, falls in love herself and deserts the stage. Her stay of two weeks in this house gives the play its title.

Conway Tearle as an author who doesn't believe in woman, plays opposite Miss Talmadge. Templar Saxe and George Fawcett, as the two other bachelors, are true to type while Tom Cameron, as the butler, and Reginald Mason as the aristocrat do all that is expected of them.

There are several elaborate settings and the photography is excellent.—FRED T. GRENELL.

"What's Your Husband Doing?"

(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

ALTHOUGH not as good as "Twenty-three and a Half-Hour's Leave," this is a genuinely good comedy, with originality, and the Ince touch. The combination of Doris May's piquancy and Douglas MacLean's refreshing personality, together with the clever situations, make the production interesting at all times.

The paths of two wives who want to make a world filled with alimony-seeking women and siren correspondents safe for two innocent young lawyer husbands, are crossed by young wife No. 3, who wrongly suspects her spouse of infidelity. All go to an inn on the same evening—but not in family groups. A raid results in the final scenes being laid in jail, Lawyer husband on the bench in the absence of golf playing husbands, trying the wives. —CHARLOTTE DANTZIG.

"The Garage"

(Fatty Arbuckle Comedy—Two Reels—Comique-Paramount)

FATTY ARBUCKLE'S newest comedy, "The Garage," doesn't carry the inspiration in its idea that was found in its immediate forerunner, "The Hayseed." Consequently it is weak in comparison. Where Fatty caught genuine humanity even though it was burlesqued in the previous issue, this time he employs tried and true slapstick methods. And the picture follows too closely on the heels of the other to make its values appreciated, granting that it has any of these in the first place. Fatty belongs in subjects of rural life. He is supreme in delineating the country yokel and in his treatment of the character he has always approached the bulls-eye of truth. The genuine clever comedy is that which can exploit life with reasonable genuineness, colored of course with a vein of satire. That is where "The Garage" is lacking. True it generates a certain amount of humor. But that is to be expected with an Arbuckle piece.

The point is he is capable of offering us better achievements—achievements which his imitators cannot duplicate. Anyone who poses as a comedian on the screen could appear quite as acceptable as Fatty here. Still he acts the dunce enough to make himself original. You look upon him as the hostler of a garage—the man of all-work. The fun is derived from a pail of water, a hose, a flivver or two, and the mechanics that make these machines fall to pieces—and, of course, a slippery road. The hose is played upon Buster Keaton and likewise upon Fatty. It is slapstick any way you look at it.

Playing at three New York theatres simultaneously, we noticed that the piece roused the risibilities of the spectators to loud and emphatic appreciation. So it must be called a success. The humor is not spontaneous because it is conceived with labor—labor which does not spring forth from any inspiration. The laughter is gained through the employment of practical jokes and stunts, but it is not continuous laughter, at least, not in the New York theatres. Some spectators exploded—some always will when a comedian finds his feet have left him.—LAURENCE REID.

"Hungry Lions and Tender Hearts"

(Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels—Fox)

THIS Sunshine Comedy is going to attract a lot of attention because of its employment of lions to help out the comedians and the girls. Of course it doesn't present any story beyond the familiar idea of the "chase." The chasing however is not done by grotesque cops or by any particular party who has been made the "goat" of the action. The pursuing methods are employed by a group of lions which turn everyone in the picture to flight. A particularly handsome beast acts the part of the leader, and he covers familiar ground in his journey. In exploiting him the director has thought up nothing original since the flighty members jump from one room to another—jump in and out of folding beds—jump up and down fire escapes—jump from house to house—and jump all over one another in avoiding the king of the forest. He is a good-natured animal and by his expression you wouldn't think he would hurt a fly. Before he catches the comedians a goodly share of property effects are destroyed.

Quite as much money is expended in making these comedies as in a five-reel feature. The action is naturally repetitious and because of its development the humor spends itself early. But one is too fearful for the actors to be worried about any absence of comical highlights. The funmakers practise trick falls and jumps on purpose—a factor which also conceals the spontaneity. Still it is interesting because of the lions. Every person and every animal connected with the comedy works hard to bring out its value. Among the players

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last fifteen weeks arranged alphabetically as index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who h shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publisha final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no act comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this depa ment will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 4, 1919.

Advance Reviews of Features Given Pre-Release Showings

he captivating personality of Marvel Rae, who formerly one of the peaches of the Sennett l. Roy Del Ruth directed under the supern of Hampton Del Ruth.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Twilight Baby"

ury Lehrmann First National Exhibitors' Circuit—Two Reels)

HIS purports to be a "Hank" Mann starring vehicle, but as a matter of fact much of the riment, and that is quite some, is furnished by terrier "purp," a baby not over a couple of ths old and some of the most ingenious busi ever devised for a comedy.

here are really two pictures in a "Twilight y." The first has to do with what happened a "foundling" after it is abandoned by its nts and adopted by the "purp" we have men-, and made one of a rather large family of nine species. The manner in which this dog rms before the camera is good for both wonment and much hilarity.

he next episode begins with the "twilight y" grown up, "Hank" Mann having the role. picture then takes on the usual low comedy po and keeps going with plenty of pep and ch, with a lot of new stuff, until well toward last, when it degenerates somewhat into the "get by" class. However, so much has been wded into the film, especially in the first episode, ch is absolutely new and novel and mirth proing, that the production may be rated as one the best of slap-stick comedies to come through a long time.

Hank" Mann contributes to the fun making, ough some of his scenes sort of miss fire with The supporting cast is good and the camera k is especially fine. All in all, it is a comedy ch rates with the topnotchers and worth a mil of the majority of releases of its type placed n the market in the past couple of years.—S. DICKERSON.

"The Whirlwind"

ll Good Pictures Serial—15 Episodes—State Rights)

ERE'S a good one. In the reviewer's opinion it can play any house booking serials and e its patrons satisfaction. And exhibitors need be afraid to exploit it to the limit for it has necessary ingredients or as we say the "punch".

he story is there, it unfolds well, it is "chuck " of thrilling and daring stunts, the direction, tography and titles are up to standard and but not least it has the star, Charles Hutnson, who is supported by a splendid cast of ial actors, among whom are Edith Thornton, o plays the lead, Richard Neill, the heavy and rl Dane whose middle name ought to be "dareil." These actors are not only good types but itate at nothing, it seems, to give this serial nerve racking thrills.

nd we must not forget to mention that Joseph Golden, who has written and directed many ular serials is also author and director of this es, it's a good one.—FRANK LEONARD.

"On Strike"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

UD FISHER, the creator of Mutt and Jeff, has struck off on a new path here in presenting his est animated cartoon. He has adapted himself the spirit of revolution by offering Mutt and f on strike. Yes-sir-ee, the two freaks have lked out of the canvas for higher wages. The cartoon is quite a departure from the usual presentation, since the artist is seen in the flesh. Mutt and Jeff call him up to announce that they have struck for an increase in salary, with shorter hours, and extra pay for overtime. Bud is independent enough to refuse their demands. He quietly informs them that they don't know when they are well situated.

But the freaks will not listen to reason. They attempt to draw a cartoon but find themselves without ink, pen, paper, desk or the other properties of a cartoonist's business. But Mutt draws a pen and Jeff draws the rest. In a moment of anger the tall fellow pours the ink all over his little companion, and then takes an erasing fluid and eliminates him. Of course it is up to Mutt to draw his pal and bring him back to life. The cartoon they conceive is wholly lacking in inspiration. Nevertheless it is booked by an exhibitor, and the two freaks hide behind an orchestra chair to learn its reception. And they discover to their sorrow that their work is a poor substitution for the tried and true material of Mr. Fisher's. The result is they are glad to enter his employment again. This is a novel cartoon, the originality compensating for a lack of comical expression. It shows that Mr. Fisher is right up with the times. Since the freaks have a following no exhibitor should hesitate about booking them. Their batting average is acceptable.—LAURENCE REID.

"Blind Love"

(Gerald F. Bacon Production Starring Lucy Cotton—Six Reels—Released Through Aywon Film Corp.)

THIS is a very "pretty" picture. It has pretty sets, pretty exteriors, a pretty love story which also has its strong dramatic moments and a pretty star, Luch Cotton. Photography and direction could not be better and the titles are well written and to the point.

Miss Cotton is supported by a cast of well known actors, among whom are George Le Guere, who plays the lead, Frank O'Connor, Thurlow Bergen, Morgan Coman, Charles Butler and Edouards Durand.

Josephine Burden, an heiress becomes interested in a young man of good family who is a gambler. A crafty broker in financial difficulties observing her interest, gets the young man to sign a note while in a drunken condition, agreeing to pay $50,000 to him provided a marriage takes place through his introduction. A meeting is brought about by the broker, which ripens into love.

When the young man discovers that his sweetheart is an heiress, he decides that considering his own circumstances, he must give her up and determines to leave. He tells the broker of his plans and the latter fearful lest his schemes miscarry, tells the young lady who intercepts her lover. A proposal is the result which is quickly followed by marriage.—FRANK LEONARD.

Screen Magazine—No. 46

(Universal—Released January 2, 1920)

NUMBER Forty-six of Universal's Screen Magazines maintains the average released by this company during the past month. It does not present as varied an assortment of subjects as were seen some months ago. Lillian Russell and her beauty treatment is absent, also several close-ups of figures who have made a plea for fame or notoriety. Three of the subjects are regular contributions—namely, Cinema Luke and his Adventures, Letter Laughs, and Futurist Movies. The first and last mentioned have always been identified with the Magazine and carry a point or two of interest, but the Letter Laughs is a subject wholly lacking in humor. They capitalize the ignorance that is abroad. This time the letters are addressed to physicians and present the ailments of clients or excuses for non-payment of debts. One has to be exceptionally responsive to find humor in them. It seems as if the camera could be turned to a better direction.

The Magazine opens with the ability to paddle one's canoe through a peculiar motive power. Charles H. Clark, a New York inventor, has recently discovered that a canoeist can follow the waves of a ferry boat for miles without paddling. It is all explained scientifically. But why rest, with a ferry boat—why not follow the night boat to Albany? Cinema Luke makes out that he is something of a Hebrew comedian here. His employers have tired of him enacting the same old tricks, so they cautioned cartoonist Leslie Elton to make him perform. His number adds weight to the Magazine. Hudson Maxim, the inventor of engines of war and paraphernalia of peace, follows with some interesting experiments. He presents an assistant lighting a cigar with a stick of dynamite. This fellow should qualify in drinking wood alcohol. Mr. Maxim also shows how smokeless powder can burn under water. He is succeeded by the Letter Laughs. The conclusion brings the familiar Futurist Movies. Senator Hiram Johnson is the figure this time.—LAURENCE REID.

"Germany 1920"

(Fox News Subject—Two Parts)

THERE is not a great deal of information coming from Germany these days and that which does reach us cannot be called entirely authentic. A goodly share of press dispatches are palpably manufactured on hearsay and are colored for public consumption. Which is by way of introducing some news from Germany that bears a genuine stamp. Fox has scored a beat on its rivals in presenting as a News subject, "Germany 1920," which presents a series of pictures of how the former Empire has put herself to work. There was considerable difficulty in catching a few of the pictures owing to red tape and the dangers attached, but the majority were released by the German government under the condition that they were not to be used as propaganda.

The spectator is first introduced with some shots of the ex-Kaiser, the former Crown Prince, and the ex-Emperor of Austria taken during the war. The humble citizen, who now resides at Amerongen, is seen handing out iron crosses by the wholesale; Willie presents himself reviewing his troops and Charles of Austria does likewise. Hindenburg is shown in civilian attire. The most interesting part of the subject are the pictures that show how Germany is "buckling down" to work. The entire nation is sober about its tremendous task. You see women and children in the field, in the shop, alongside the men. Germany is working sixteen hours a day, which is a lesson to America not to lag behind, else we will lose our world markets. An industrial fair at Leipsic advertises the merits of German wares. This is a subject which will arouse a lot of comment if for no other reason than by pointing a comparison it will teach American industry to mind its p's and q's else it will lose out in the world of commerce.—LAURENCE REID.

"POLLYANNA"

(PICKFORD-UNITED ARTISTS)

The Supreme Effort of True Artists

UST a simple, homely tale of incidents in the lives of a number of rural New England folk with "America's Sweetheart" as a little orphan girl scarcely in her teens, is "Pollyanna."

s keynote is "gladness." The gladness of a child with a naturally py disposition who has been taught to look on the bright side ife. Its high light is faith. Faith in God; faith in humanity; n in the power of the physician to heal when science has failed. message is the joy of living and loving. The power for good ch a good example carries.

ary Pickford's "Pollyanna," referring to the character, is a de- t. No less pleasing are all of the principals of the cast. Howard ston as "Jimmie Bean" is wonderful. He is a boy, playing a with the skill of the finished artist. And in the role of "Aunt ly" we can imagine no one who would have done so well as has herine Griffith.

f drama in the accepted sense, in "Pollyanna," there is none. ngle scene, where the little bed-ridden child is about to attempt alk, carries suspense. There is no villain. No attempt to in- e the players in a plot. The picture glides from one episodic e to another, like a rippling brook running between grass grown ks in the locale of the picture, each one carrying its own little k of humor or its own peculiar bit of heart interest appeal, all together with its thread of a story, wrapped about its unique racters.

et so skilfully have the scenes been constructed, so wonderful the characterizations, that the picture glues the attention from first to its last scene.

othing quite so delicate has ever been done. It stands a produc- with which no comparisons can be made, the supreme effort of artists.—Length, 6 reels.—Reviewed at the Tremont Temple atre, Boston. Small.—Boston.

smile and go home imbued with "Pollyanna's" spirit of being "glad" that worse misfortunes than those which sometimes have made you blue, haven't overtaken you.

SUGGESTIONS

In any Mary Pickford picture your great selling point is the star. In addition to this for "Pollyanna" you have a great story. We therefore advise the billing of star and title equally. The producers are furnishing a reproduction of an artist's drawing of Miss Pickford particularly fitted for newspaper work. It is a beauty. We recommend it for your newspaper displays in preference to a still. The press book also lists a quantity of the famous "glad" sayings of "Pollyanna." They are extremely adaptable to use in all forms of printed publicity. Quote "Pollyanna" the "glad girl."

Window displays in connection with stores selling the Eleanor Porter novel is also an exploitation angle not to be overlooked.

"Pollyanna" presents opportunities for lobby display and prologue numbers, especially the latter. We would suggest the staging of the scene of the picture where "Pollyanna" attempts to walk after the accident which has paralyzed her limbs. Also the very first scene where "Pollyanna's" father dies, using the subtitle for a speaking line. You would then fade out your prologue directly into the screening of the scene.

most famous character "Pollyanna, the glad girl," in the sweetest story of rural life ever told on the stage, within the pages of a book or on the screen.

"By faith shall ye live." That is the message of "Pollyanna" the "glad" girl of Eleanor H. Porter's novel which Mary Pickford brings to the screen in all its freshness, beauty and infinite pathos and humor that the author suggested in the printed words. A picture destined to do more than entertain. It will live as an immortal poem. A pinnacle of the heights to which the motion picture may aspire. It will make you "glad" you saw it and "glad" it was Mary Pickford who plays the role of the "glad" girl.

An epic poem visualized with all the skill of a most distinguished artist. The picture which makes you as "glad" as the "glad" girl of the "glad" play.

"HAUNTING SHADOWS"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

H. B. Warner Has a Winner Here

A CLEVER mystery picture is "Haunting Shadows," an adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's famous novel, "The House of a Thousand Candles," which serves H. B. Warner for his latest attraction. It is not a misstatement when we declare it to be the best entertainment the star has ever had—and he has had some interesting ones, incidentally. The subject matter is rich in mystery and this element has been capitalized for its full value. It is a picture which will make the pulse beat quickly because of its wealth of incidents all of which have been developed to make the note of suspense dominant.

Those familiar with the original story will not be unduly surprised, still their attention will be held on account of the action which is brought forward with compact continuity. The idea presents a young man who will inherit the property of an eccentric uncle providing he lives up to the contents of the will. The melodramatic incidents are concentrated upon his efforts to make good. It is a picture of lights and shadows. Praise must be given Henry King, the director, for the manner in which he has maintained the suspense and incorporated the atmosphere. Here is a director who has accomplished some good things. He invariably succeeds in turning out interesting pictures.

The romantic element is a negligible factor until the finale, but one doesn't miss it so plentiful is the assortment of actionful scenes. Allowing for a bit of repetitious detail, the melodrama is above criticism. Mr. Warner makes an ideal type for the leading role. He is one of the genuine artists of the screen, a master of pantomime and its expression. Assisting him are two clever character actors in Frank Lanning and Charles Hill Mailes. The picture has been faithfully adapted from a story rich in screen representation.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

H. B. Warner, the popular star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest feature entitled "Haunting Shadows." This is an adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's celebrated novel, "The House of a Thousand Candles," and it affords the star the role of an heir to a wealthy estate providing he lives up to the will of his lately deceased uncle. The estate, he would leave to his nephew, John Glenarm, is situated in a lonely spot in Indiana, and the stipulations of the will make emphatic that John must not leave the house a single night during the ensuing year or the property will revert to Marian Deveraux, a young schoolmarm, in whom old Glenarm had taken a great interest. John has his troubles in living up to the contract.

Bates, the butler, has been commissioned to make things unpleasant for him and the lawyer and his hirelings are forever attempting to find the hiding-place of the reputed wealth. Furthermore, John falls in love with the pretty school teacher, who masquerades as a pupil of an adjoining seminary. Eventually he leaves the house to follow her to Cincinnati and learns her true identity. When he returns Pickering, the lawyer, tells him that he has forfeited the estate. When the hirelings attempt to evict him, the vision of old Glenarm comes into the room. And he is genuine flesh and blood. Satisfied that John is every inch a man, he turns over the property to him and the latter gains a sweetheart, too. "Haunting Shadows" may be defined as a comedy-mystery melodrama, if there is such a thing in the theatrical dictionary. Throughout the five reels the interest is held because of the stirring line of action.

CATCH LINES

Mystery, adventure and romance are woven together in H. B. Warner's new picture, "Haunting Shadows," a screen version of the famous novel, "A House of a Thousand Candles." Isn't such a mixture of elements sufficient to entertain? We think so.

He took possession of the house, but he couldn't leave it for a year. Follow his adventure in as stirring a picture as has ever come from the screen. See "Haunting Shadows."

How would you like to live in a house under the stipulation that if you left it for a single night you would forfeit it and also a considerable fortune. See H. B. Warner in "Haunting Shadows." A rare treat.

PROGRAM READER

John Glenarm will inherit his uncle's property providing he lives up to the contents of the will. A clause states that he must live in Glenarm House for the ensuing year and not leave it for a single night. John is game to the core. Try as they might a certain group of plotters could not discourage him. There is also a girl who figures. She will inherit the property unless John minds his p's and q's. He can take care of himself in regard to overcoming the obstacles of the plotters. And certain nights he is forced to arm himself. But he cannot take care of his heart. In obeying its call he very nearly loses his property. How he meets his problems is told in a series of interesting events, which following an adventurous line of action, are calculated to keep you in a constant state of suspense. See "Haunting Shadows," an adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's novel, "The House of a Thousand Candles." It is the best picture that H. B. Warner has ever had, and he has had some mighty good ones.

SUGGESTIONS

In exploiting this feature make sure that you bring out its source. Tell that it is an adaptation of Meredith Nicholson's novel, "The House of a Thousand Candles," which is one of the best pieces of fiction ever written.

"STRONGER THAN DEATH"

Nazimova's Rare Art Capitalized Again

NAZIMOVA has gone to India for her latest screen expression and in all frankness we cannot say that the picture is worthy of her rare art and personality. In substance and in technique it is not in the same class as "The Red Lantern," a previous essay of the East. However, the creaking hinges of the machine-made contraption are silenced, and situations and climaxes are effectively heightened through the artistry of the star's portrayal. Her acting is as finely shaded, as subtle and as delicately wrought in detail as if coldly conceived and played for the sole purpose of perfection of technique. There is no stronger personality in pictures, none seems less shadow or more flesh than Nazimova. None makes fuller use of her magnetism and few have such magnetism to use. Perhaps that is why she dominates her subjects and makes them seem weak in comparison.

This picture is not conceived on the stupendous scale of "The Red Lantern," nor does it carry the mystery, the spirit, of that achievement, however fine its atmosphere. The idea behind it lacks inspiration and tells simply, almost naively, that love is stronger than death, and in the execution of it the director has been somewhat laborious in his methods. So much so that the spectator is constantly ahead of the action. The result is suspense takes flight in the climaxes. In the development of the romance, the moving scenes are concentrated upon the superstitious natives and their inevitable mutiny against the British garrison.

Without Nazimova, the picture would be an ordinary, every day, Oriental subject. But the star lifts it, there's no denying that. Charles Bryant, who made the adaptation, gives a finely shaded performance as the lover. The picture suffers from excessive footage. There are many scenes that could be dispensed with advantageously, knitting the action more closely and concentrating the drama.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Nazimova, the incomparable, will come to the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her latest dramatic production entitled "Stronger Than Death." This is a screen adaptation of the novel by I. A. R. Wylie and it depicts a beautiful love which develops between a man and a woman placed by fate into an atmosphere of danger and swiftly moving events. It recounts the adventures of Sigrid Ferson, the dancer, and the man she adores—the hermit of Gaya. He is a physician who devotes his time to fighting a cholera epidemic among the natives. The action is replete with thrills and compelling dramatic climaxes that grow out of an abortive mutiny and massacre of the English planned by the fanatical Hindu natives.

The biggest dramatic scene is where Sigrid dances on the steps of the temple—a weird dance which strikes awe and terror to the hearts of the natives, and causes them to delay their uprising until the British garrison comes to the rescue of the civilian community of Gaya. Sigrid's presence there is regarded as the returned spirit of the sacred dancer of the temple, "the bride of Vishnu." Her sacrifice is rewarded by the devotion of the hermit doctor, and she finds that her love for him is stronger than death. Nazimova's interpretation of the dancer is excellent testimony why she is called "the star of a thousand moods." Her expressive features detail every shade and subtlety of the feminine soul. In the cast supporting her are Charles Bryant, Charles French, Herbert Prior and others. Mr. Bryant adapted the story for the screen. He also assisted Herbert Blache in the direction.

CATCH LINES

Nazimova, the incomparable—Nazimova, the star of a thousand moods—Nazimova, the screen's greatest actress, in her great photoplay of sublime love, "Stronger Than Death."

A massive picture of the Orient which intrigues the spectator with its color and atmosphere and dramatic action—that is "Stronger Than Death," Nazimova's newest production.

She danced to save her own people from destruction. Perhaps she might die in the attempt, since she had an ailing heart. But love is stronger than death and she lived because of her sublime faith and devotion See Nazimova in "Stronger Than Death."

A gripping romance of the Orient—of India, the land of mystery and passion. See this exotic drama of the East. Feel the mystic lure of the Orient in "Stronger Than Death."

PROGRAM READER

The management takes great pleasure in announcing that Nazimova, the incomparable—the actress of a thousand moods, will appear at this theatre beginning ——— in "Stronger Than Death." This production is considered by the press and public as a worthy companion to "The Red Lantern," since it is a spectacular drama of the Orient. The backgrounds are different, since the action takes place in India, that land of mystery which has figured so much in prose, poetry and dramatic literature. The story is founded upon a beautiful love which develops between a man and a woman placed by fate into an atmosphere of danger. Stirring drama at all times illumines the narrative, making it one of those stories that gets a strong hold upon the emotions of the spectator. When our patrons see "Stronger Than Death," they will look upon a picture of great beauty, not only from a scenic viewpoint but from a dramatic one as well. Nazimova is superb in her role.

SUGGESTIONS

There is only one thing to do in exploiting a Nazimova production and that is go the limit. Don't hesitate about covering the same old ground. By treating the star in a campaign of superlatives you will impress the skeptical. You will bring home to every patron that she is just what you paint her to be. Bring out in catch lines and a teaser campaign that she is a brilliant star—the most brilliant actress on the screen. Play up that she is mistress of every human emotion—that she is the star of a thousand moods. You can compare the picture to "The Red Lantern" by stating that it is a drama of the East—a drama of India, that land made famous in prose, poetry and dramatic literature.

"THE SHARK"

(FOX)

Sea Story Furnishes Walsh a Dramatic Role

GEORGE WALSH is branching out. Time was when we had to be content in seeing him in mock-heroic roles that smacked of amateur theatricals, and he was shackled to them for so long that it began to look as if he couldn't do anything else. Now he comes forward in a melodramatic role which should merit him a deal of praise. The picture is, perhaps, the best thing he has ever done, because it comes closer to reality than its forerunners. There will be those who will say that the picture cannot possibly entertain since it capitalizes lust and brutality. But in emphasizing these vicious elements it is entirely within its premise. A sea story is not a sweetmeat and the men who follow the briny deep are mighty close to nature.

Of course it travels over familiar ground and uncovers during its journey several inconsistencies, but the fast-moving action is compensation enough. Mr. Henderson has endeavored to be genuine in his backgrounds, but some of his incidents are so palpably false that the picture appears often ridiculous. He permits a slumming party to visit a vicious dive attired in evening dress and, once there, he closets the masculine members in the proprietor's private "office," while the heroine is left at the mercy of the rough denizens. Except for these brief lapses the direction is meritorious.

The idea brought forth here finds expression in the young man who is regenerated through feminine influence. In the execution of it the star is permitted to maintain his athletic prowess. The scenes of his fight to protect the honor of the girl are thrilling and they are more sincerely striven for than those of his previous pictures. The theme is not unlike that contained in Jack London's "The Sea Wolf." But comparisons aside, the picture is a vivid melodrama that carries a two-fisted punch. Mr. Walsh gives a colorful performance.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

George Walsh's new Fox picture, "The Shark," which comes to the ——— theatre next ———, is one of the best photoplays in which the star has been seen in many a day. Mr. Walsh does not appear as a college athlete, but assumes the role of a human "beast of the sea" in a story of love and adventure. It tells of the vicissitudes through which a young girl passes in her search for expression. She is captured by a human fiend and is saved from a horrible fate by a man who would destroy her, but whose manhood is awakened by her helplessness. He becomes her protector and fights for her safety and her life. Shark Rawley, the mate of a tramp schooner, has been disillusioned about women, but a time comes when he changes his opinion.

In a sailor's cafe he discovers Doris Selby, a member of a slumming party, in the clutches of a vicious habitue. In his attempt to rescue her he is forced to fight for his own life. Doris, in the meantime, has been spirited away to the schooner by Captain Sanchez, and when Shark discovers her plight he is forced to heroic measures in protecting her. The odds are against him but he fights his way through to safety. The ship catches fire and Shark leaps into the sea with the girl. They keep afloat by means of a spar and are rescued by a searching party conducted by Doris' father. This photoplay tells a powerful story of love and hate and life on the sea, where men are ruled by brute force. George Walsh surpasses himself in forceful acting and a splendid presentation of a peculiarly difficult role. The cast includes Mary Hall and others. The feature contains a picturesque appeal through its rich atmosphere.

George Walsh drops for the time being the athletic juvenile role to play a blue shirt lead in Fox's "The Shark"

He was disillusioned about women but when a certain girl needed protection he was man enough to come to the rescue. See "The Shark," a picture of stirring adventure as it is found on the briny deep.

They called him the shark because of his fighting ability. There was also another reason. See George Walsh in "The Shark."

PROGRAM READER

Do you like to read stories of the bounding deep? Do you like to make the acquaintance of rugged sailors who live only for the gratification of their pleasures—who roam the seven seas in search of adventure? If so, then "The Shark" is the story for you. It will come to the ——— theatre next ——— as a photoplay and you will be interested in its contents. Why? Because it depicts a stirring line of action, well drawn characterization, a pretty vein of romance, and some rousing thrills. The star is George Walsh, the athletic actor of the Fox forces. We guarantee this to be his greatest picture. It permits him to display his athletic prowess as well as his dramatic talent.

"GREATER THAN FAME"
(SELZNICK)

Mediocre Picture Made from Pot-Boiler Story

QUITE likely a great many people will find entertainment in Elaine Hammerstein's new picture, but to our mind it becomes draggy and wearisome long before the final reels are wound. It is evolved from a moss-covered, moth-eaten plot and tains too little dramatic substance and too much sentimental neness to lift it out of a theatrical and artificial rut. There has en no attempt to ring in any changes on an old theme, that of a untry girl of talent who goes to the city to find expression and covers that honest romance is greater than the sham which accompanies fame. The plot resembles a checker board since each rson is given, arbitrarily, certain things to do—to move when told d to stop upon orders. The result is not drama but tedium.

Like in most pictures with a purpose, the main idea is hammered bluntly throughout the action, and the long explanatory titles ke it preachy. Such a story can be justified only by original atment or particularly clever characterization. Neither of these alities are discernible in "Greater Than Fame." The action is st ordinary, many of the incidents being of a routine order. As a amatic story there is nothing to it. As a study of a young girl o finds fame not worth the effort in obtaining it, the subject is nmonplace.

The sentimental note is over-emphasized through the employment preachy advice on the part of a personage who would save the roine from degradation. Miss Hammerstein is attractive in the ding role, but she does not work with enthusiasm, probably be- se there is nothing to enthuse over. Among those who contribute od support are Walter McGrail, Julia Swayne Gordon and Arthur naldson. The story has been well staged, there being a wealth of propriate backgrounds.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

SUGGESTIONS

You can exploit this feature as the second Elaine Hammerstein subject offered by Selznick. Bring out that it is a story of a young girl's sacrifice to both fame and fortune for love and happiness. The theme can be exploited in effective catch lines. For your lobby display you can put photos of the star mounted on compo board with symbols representing "Love," "Fame" and "Fortune"—connected with them by colored streamers. Play up the theme in all your copy and tell that the drama is human above every thing else. You can work up an allegorical prelude on the stage if you want to go in extensively with your advertising. Figures to represent the three symbols mentioned above can express the idea of the picture most effectively. Mention what the star has done. Emphasize that she has one of the most attractive personalities on the screen. Link up with the stores by use of window cards announcing the star and her arrival.

"SLAVES OF PRIDE"
(VITAGRAPH)

Alice Joyce Has Familiar Story of Marital Conflict

IT is quite possible that "Slaves of Pride," Alice Joyce's latest production, will prove popular. It contains a choice assortment of situations and characters that have long been tried and often proved true. Though the author has not offered anything new in plot and characterization, and his craftsmanship seems quite wooden, labored and obvious, still he manages, through a measure of dramatic insight, to invest the play with enough force and vitality to make it generally interesting. He must recognize, however, the great similarity between his "Slaves of Pride" and hundreds of other pictures that have preceded it.

As there is an absence of novelty and freshness in both plot and characterization, the picture will appear quite disappointing to those who seek variety. If we cannot have new ideas—then let us at least have the old ones developed so as to appear up-to-date. The ancient theme of the daughter who is bartered off by mother to the highest bidder is brought to the fore. It is the wife's object to break her husband's pride and this she does after she suffers and suffers and suffers. One can anticipate the denouement from the introductory scene and it arrives according to Hoyle.

The heroine doesn't trespass to find romantic expression. The conflict is established in her efforts to make her spouse love her more than he loves himself. Very old, isn't it? Yet the director has conceived a share of moving situations so that the interest is never allowed to drag. Miss Joyce has moments when the charm and deftness of her art come into their own. But for the most part she seems not so much to be living a character as enacting scenes necessary to the author's plot, and this is fatal to illusion. Percy Marmont lends poise and manliness to the part of the husband. This actor is making great strides on the screen.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A delightful demonstration of the fact that money can never take the place of love forms the keynote of Vitagraph's latest picture, "Slaves of Pride," which comes to the ——— theatre beginning ——— with Alice Joyce as the star. The picture unfolds a remarkable story of the dramatic and tragic results that grow from excessive pride, and it presents wonderful opportunities for the star to express her talent and charm. Miss Joyce plays the role of Patricia Leeds, a beautiful young woman, who is placed on the auction block of marriage by her shallow-minded, extravagant mother. Mrs. Leeds is the character who demonstrates the tragedy of old age clinging to youthfulness.

She barters off Patricia to the highest bidder, who happens to be Brewster Howard, a wealthy man obsessed with excessive ideas of his own importance. His overwhelming pride makes life unbearable for Patricia. She rebels, and Howard employs his secretary in the task of humiliating her. This leads by natural sequence of events, to a secret trip by the girl and the secretary, each plotting the other's undoing. Patricia grows to love her husband and seeks by seeming to submit to the secretary's wiles, to punish her husband. The romantic trip to the country brings about a climax full of surprise. Miss Joyce gives a capital portrayal of the bride. The vitality and magnetism of her performance is admirably emphasized, and she delineates the character surely, easily, and vividly. Prominent in her support is Percy Marmont. The picture was directed by George Terwilliger from a story by William B. Courtney, the adaptation having been done by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

CATCH LINES

What is a good way for a bride to punish and reform a husband overcome with pride? See "Slaves of Pride" with Alice Joyce. A rare entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

Most of the fine things in life prove to be dross, according to Alice Joyce's latest picture, "Slaves of Pride," which comes to this theatre beginning ———, unless they are accompanied by the fulfillment of love. Palaces, wealth, and all manner of luxury, the feature testifies, are empty unless enjoyed in the atmosphere of love. Miss Joyce is cast in the role of Patricia Leeds, a girl who, under the spurs of an ambitious mother, becomes the bride of Brewster Howard, a man of excessive wealth. Howard showers all kinds of luxury on her, but love is absent and the girl soon finds that everything else in the world is empty. How she finds a solution for her problem is revealed in a powerfully dramatic picture—a picture which carries a plethora of rich actionful scenes. We advise you to see "Slaves of Pride"—it is a rare treat in every respect.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture carries a theme that is decidedly human. The drama that is unfolded here is taking place in hundreds of homes. The girl who is bartered off by her mother to the highest bidder in the matrimonial ring, is a familiar type. So exploit the characterization. Bring out that the heroine finds a solution for her problem that it would be advisable for every young woman to know. Appeal to your feminine patronage. Advise them that a picture of tremendous import is offered here. Play up the star of course. Mention that she never fails to be the star of a first rate entertainment. It would be well to mention that she was the star of "The Third Degree." Tell that the picture is human—a slice of real life. Use catch lines and a teaser campaign.

"PEGEEN"

Saccharine Story on a Pollyanna Theme

BESSIE LOVE'S screen essays have never been very vigorous. One remembers few dramatic moments in the assortment. They have mostly been characterized by a delicacy of theme in which the action is exceedingly brittle and the development of it unduly frail. Just a wee mite of a story we would call her latest contribution, "Pegeen," and as such it is typical of the things which have brought her into prominence. There is scarcely any semblance of plot, it being more a collection of pretty photographs especially posed for the occasion. In fact the drama, if one may be pardoned in defining it as such, could be evolved in three reels, so lacking is it in the fundamentals which spell action and suspense.

Miss Love carries on the message of Pollyanna, which is to be happy and happy and happy. After you have seen happiness radiated for an hour it becomes rather cloying. The frailness of the story is strongly emphasized in the early reels, since there is always a suggestion of a plot which never comes to the surface. The good people have the field all to themselves, though an attempt at contrast or conflict is shown by introducing a derelict character whose object is to emphasize the note of pathos—a note without which a Pollyanna story could not be called complete. When the star is not worrying about him she is playing Pollyanna with a vengeance.

The calibre of the picture will hardly appeal to those who have reached maturity, but the children, especially young girls, will undoubtedly go in raptures over it. The film is padded out to feature length through several naive scenes of a romantic nature. The players do not have much more to do than the star. Each smiles pleasantly. The pictorial backgrounds suffice and the direction is good.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Love, the charming Vitagraph star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture, "Pegeen." This is an adaptation of Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd's novel of the same name and it affords the star a delightful role in which to express her fragrant personality. She appears as Pegeen (Peg for short) whose particular mission is to spread happiness throughout the community of Happy Valley by being happy herself.

Now Peg is somewhat of an orphan since her father, Dan O'Neill, became a derelict, mentally as well as physically, after the death of his wife. His mind had given way under the sorrow and he becomes a firebug, his object being to find his wife through the light of the fire of the burning structures. It comes about that all the people of Happy Valley are aroused by an epidemic of barnfires. They suspect the wrong person, but the men form a posse and with the aid of bloodhounds, they scour the woods and are led to the really guilty incendiary, O'Neill. Peg who has been apprised of the search for him has reached her father's hiding place but finds him dying. So she makes his last moments as happy as possible. She finds romantic expression with her youthful lover. This is a picture of heart appeal and sentimental touches and one which also carries a rich message of good cheer. Miss Love gives to "Pegeen" a personality, a touch that is wholly charming. Her support is entirely capable. David Smith directed.

CATCH LINES

The only thing you can give away and keep too is Happiness. See "Pegeen," a charming picture of a girl's philosophy—HAPPINESS.

She believed that the greatest blessing in life came from making other people happy. She never complained but did her drudgery with a smile. See Bessie Love in "Pegeen."

See "Pegeen," an adaptation of Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd's story of the same name. See Bessie Love radiate happiness. A picture of wonderful charm. Don't miss it.

PROGRAM READER

Bessie Love, star of many Vitagraph pictures, has become a sort of distinct portrayer of the little Irish girl type. Her latest presentation of this type of character is in the title role of "Pegeen," the production which will be shown at this theatre on ——— of ——— week. Miss Love plays a young girl in her early teens who devotes all her energies toward making other persons happy. She succeeds in countless ways, even to the extent of comforting her dying father who is responsible for many crimes. Her philosophy is to radiate happiness by being happy herself. Work rests lightly on her shoulders and no matter how difficult it is or how boresome, she always manages to accomplish it with a smile. The picture is full of quaint charm and sentiment and touches of heart interest. "Pegeen" will give you a new view of life and send you away with a smile. Be sure to see it.

SUGGESTIONS

Feature this production as a joy picture—the kind of picture which should be seen by every man, woman and child. Bring out its message—its happy philosophy. Emphasize its theme in all your copy—particularly in your newspaper copy, that it is a picture that will send you away with a smile. Bring out that it is a romance of Happy Valley—that it teaches a lesson in kindliness, and thoughtfulness for others. Feature in catch lines with a series of questions such as "Did you ever feel like smiling after a hard day's work? See Bessie Love and learn a valuable lesson." You might bring out what the star has done on the screen by mentioning her other pictures. Play up the author. But above all play up its message.

"NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH"
(HOLMES-METRO)

Nothing Wonderful, But Will Entertain

WILLIAM COLLIER'S farce comedy which made all Broadway laugh during a long run, back in the days when it was necessary to have a regular show stay long on New York's Rialto, seems to have lost much of its mirth-provoking ingredients in being transferred to the screen.

In fact we are disappointed since the combination of a good basic plot and a clever comedian, well cast, held a promise of something really hilarious. But nothing out of the ordinary has been evolved in "Nothing But the Truth." To those who are not familiar with the story, there will be curiosity to know what fresh trouble the hero's enforced telling of the truth at all times will involve him, but the scenes are not funny in themselves. They lack action or at least most of them do and it has been necessary to resort to titles to inform the audience what is happening.

The production so far as settings, properties and exteriors go, is excellent. There is every evidence that a considerable sum of money has been spent on it and that there was no thought of stinting anything which would help put the picture over. Therefore the film's failure to register as something unusual seems more the shame.

Mr. Holmes has done much better work and his supporting cast, while good types, and undoubtedly capable people, fail to make their roles impressive. Elsie Mackay of "Clarence" fame makes her debut in pictures in this but does not register what may be termed a screen personality. She appeared somewhat camera conscious and also did not photograph well due perhaps to too broad lightings.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Taylor Holmes, the comedian every one will remember in the leading roles of such really funny pictures as "Ruggles of Red Gap" and "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship" will be presented at the ——— theatre beginning ——— in his latest feature, one produced by his own company, "Nothing But the Truth."

Adapted from the stage success which made Willie Collier famous, this picture provides the star with a role which particularly fits him and also is of such undoubted story value that every person who desires to be amused and entertained should not fail to see it.

The story told is one concerning the trouble a young society idler gets himself and several of his friends in, when on a wager he begins telling the truth for a week. There is a gentleman burglar, a detective and other characters in this who help in mixing things generally.

The greatest part of the action of the story takes place in and about a palatial country home on Long Island. For these scenes one of the handsomest estates near New York has been utilized.

Included in the cast, all of whom are well known players, is Elsie Mackaye, who is making such a hit in the new New York comedy, "Clarence."

PROGRAM READER

Certainly you have heard of William Collier's famous farce comedy "Nothing But the Truth" and we therefore do not have to convince you that in it Taylor Holmes has a vehicle which is worthy of his screen talents, for the play is most assuredly picture material. In it Mr. Holmes plays the role of young society idler who through a wager is compelled to tell nothing but the truth for a week. The result is a lot of trouble for himself and his friends. It is a most amusing and entertaining picture.

Mr. Holmes has gathered a distinguished and capable company together for the filming of this feature, the first to be produced by his own company, and in assuming the Collier role has assured himself of one of the best roles in his career. The plot is rich in laugh making material and the cast takes full advantage of every opportunity. This can be truthfully said to be a fitting vehicle for a star who has such great successes to his credit as "A Pair of Sixes," "Two Bit Seats," etc.

SUGGESTIONS

Besides the usual billing angles apparent with so clever a comedian as Holmes and an adaptation of so famous a play, this picture presents unusual opportunities for exploitation of the stunt variety. One of these is a teaser campaign founded on the fibless week basic plot suggested by the title.

Such a campaign is fully outlined in the press book published by the producers. It recommends itself to us as a most practical idea.

Another suggestion of the press book mentioned is a truth contest based on the question of "What Is Truth?" The writing of essays with a prize as a reward for the winner has unlimited opportunities for exploitation. For instance interview, lawyers, doctors and other professional men of your city and ask them to define the meaning of the word "truth" in twenty-five words with a humorous turn to their definition. Then run these statements on your screen quoting the writers. A compiled list of your definitions would prove first page news stuff to any editor if you get them from well known men of your city. Other stunts along the same lines can be used to follow this.

A story of the naked truth wearing nothing but a smile.

The story of a crusader of truth among an army of liars.

An intriguing comedy of embarrassments founded on nothing but the truth.

George Washington's motto applied to life in modern society with dire and embarrassing results.

What being truthful for a week did for a society idler who knew how to lie beautifully, but didn't dare because of a thirty thousand dollar wager.

The truth about "Nothing But the Truth" is that nothing has been left out to insure your entertainment.

"HIGH SPEED"

(HALLMARK)

Contains Many Thrills and Exciting Moments

MELODRAMA with its thrilling and exciting scenes brought up to the minute, with its villains and its daring hero and heroine, combined with a story which at times is interesting and sensational, all tend to make this production interesting for those who like stimulation.

Features of this description have always had and always will have their followings and for this reason are always in demand. Particular mention must be given here to the last reel which in itself might be called the introducing of a specialty.

The producers have engaged one of our large automobile tracks to stage a racing scene, for the story is that of the automobile and not the horse. We see the start with its interesting moments of getting ready, the race with its exciting intensity and its cheering spectators and the finish, which brings the hero in a winner.

Billy Brice, who has been disqualified from the track for "pulling" a race, is engaged by an automobile manufacturer to drive his car in a coming contest.

When the manufacturer learns of Billy's disgrace, the latter is discharged. Events, however, prove his innocence. He enters the race, wins it and also the heart of his employer's daughter.—Length, 5 reels.—Released January 17.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"High Speed," Frank G. Hall's latest sensational melodramatic production, will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

High power cars and the developing of their speed upon the track is a feature of the story. He is down and out. He was at one time a favorite of the race tracks, but through rumor, which he has not denied, that he has sold out the Vanderbilt Sweepstakes he is "in bad."

As he is walking along a country road, hungry and tired, he sees a girl in a car disputing with a chauffeur. Going to the rescue, he overcomes the chauffeur and drives the young lady home, where he discovers that her father is the well known automobile manufacturer, Rhoades. Upon being questioned as to his identity, he acknowledges that he is the man who threw up the "Sweepstakes." The manufacturer refuses to engage him as chauffeur, but through the persistent entreaties of his daughter, the father gives in.

Burk, a discharged driver seeking revenge, hunts up the dismissed chauffeur and together they make plans to "get even." Their first attempt is to oil the road in which Johnson, the racing driver, is practicing around the Rhoades course, causing the car to swerve into a tree, killing the mechanician and injuring Johnson. The car, however, is not badly damaged and is quickly repaired.

The two villains again appear in the garage on a dark night and pour gasoline over the car and floor. Billy discovers them, puts them to rout and saves the car. His employer who is attracted to the scene, observes the situation and is so pleased that he tells Billy he may drive for him in the coming race.

Although Billy's card has been taken away from him, events develop which prove his innocence. He is reinstated and wins the race.

PROGRAM READER

She wanted him to be her chauffeur because he had saved her from an abusive one. But there was a stain on his character. He had been accused of "throwing" the Vanderbilt Sweepstakes.

Upon being questioned by her father as to his identity, he acknowledges that he is the man. He is refused employment. But she loved him and gets him the job. Her father is a rich manufacturer who is also engaged in racing his cars.

While the manufacturer's latest model is speeding about the course, two discharged and disgruntled employees oil the track, causing the machine to swerve into a tree, injuring the driver.

Again they try to burn the garage in which the car is kept. They are foiled by our hero. As a reward for his alertness he is told that he may drive in the coming race. But his racing card has been taken away.

Future events prove his innocence, his card is returned, he enters and wins not only the race, but the hand of his employer's daughter.

This is a new photograph of Gladys Hullette, who is being starred with Edward Earle in Hallmark pictures. Miss Hullette's latest picture is "High Speed"

This picture if advertised properly ought to bring in the business. First it has a name which is attractive, "High Speed"; secondly, the story is of the melodramatic variety containing many thrills, and thirdly it takes as one of its features, the racing car. Automobile racing is becoming more popular every year in America and is of interest especially to many of those possessing cars. It would be a good idea to arrange a morning showing for some of the prominent automobile men in your town.

Also engage a car if you can and have a banner strung around it reading, "Going to see 'High Speed,' it has the Speed," or some such lettering.

Send cards to those possessing automobiles in your town, telling them of the event.

CATCH LINES

If you want to enjoy a thrill and a good story at the same time see "High Speed"; it will satisfy you.

"THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Kathryn Williams Runs Away with the Show

THIS purports to be a starring vehicle for Robert Warwick, but really offers several players of the cast better roles, including Kathryn Williams, who runs away with the show, acting honors and all, in the part of a cold blooded "out for the money" vamp.

Much of the picture has to do with Miss Williams' love affairs as she changes from one amour to another. Mr. Warwick is the first victim. A titled gentleman with plenty of cash is the second. Mr. Warwick's best friend is the third. The friend marries Kathryn, a little matter which previously she has not bothered about. The marriage part is where the plot comes in. Because she is the wife of his friend, Mr. Warwick keeps silent about the past and insists on thwarting plans for a fourth alliance, when according to most people's opinion he ought to be aiding it on the theory of "good riddance to bad rubbish." However, this is an English play, and the "honor of the family" idea is presented as the reason for trying to prevent the elopement.

It is probable that most people will find the offering interesting. It has been given a splendid production. The story is nicely developed and the acting is of the very highest type. And last, but not least, the picture is absolutely clean. There is no hint of the sex note, Miss Williams' frequent change in "lord and masters" being conducted on the basis of landing a man with more money for her to spend.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

In the Prologue:
Adam	Theodore Kosloff
Lilith	Yvonne Gardelle
In the Story:
Nigel Stanyon	Robert Warwick
Belle	Kathlyn Williams
Monica	Wanda Hawley
Brian	Tom Forman
Sir Mostyn Hollingsworth	Winter Hall
Loftus Roupelle	Irving Cummings
Mrs. Stanyon	Loyola O'Connor
The Baron	Clarence Geldart
Sweadle	William Brown

Directed by William C. De Mille.
Story by R. C. Carton.
Scenario by Margaret Turnbull.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

R. C. Carton's famous play, a story of life's forbidden fruit "The Tree of Knowledge" is to be presented in picture form at the ——— theatre ——— beginning ———.

In the role of Nigal Stanyon, Robert Warwick, star of so many good pictures is presented and in his support is a cast so notable that the production overshadows even its eminent leading man.

Among the players who appear in important roles are Kathlyn Williams, Wanda Hawley, Tom Forman and Irving Cummings while in the prologue showing Adam and Lillith in the Garden of Eden are the celebrated Russian dancers, Theodore Kosloff and Yvonne Gardelle.

Particularly sumptuous is the screen version of "The Tree of Knowledge" as is fitting for a production depicting the gay life of Paris and of the solid enjoyment of the upper classes of staid England. Fine clothes, great sets and the other evidences of the luxury loving, grace every scene. The story is dramatic in the extreme, being concerned principally with the life of "Belle" whom you first meet in Paris as the mistress of Mr. Warwick and whose life later intermingles with his after he has settled down hoping to marry a girl of his own class in England. In the role of "Belle," Miss Williams, a star in her own right, has one of the best parts of her long experience. It might well have been called a starring vehicle for her. Wanda Hawley, whom you will remember especially in "Everywoman" has the role of Mr. Warwick's leading woman.

PROGRAM READER

Robert Warwick, or rather Major Warwick will be presented in another feature of entertainment value, titled "The Tree of Knowledge," beginning ———. The engagement will be for ——— days in as much as this star is always popular and in his latest vehicle he has a worthy successor to "An Adventure in Hearts" which was recently played at this theatre.

In support of Mr. Warwick is a notable cast. In the fact the picture with a leading man of smaller fame, might be termed all star. Kathlyn Williams has one of the best roles of her career and she plays it beautifully. Others in the cast who have great reputations are: Wanda Hawley, Tom Forman and Irving Cummings. The picture is an adaptation of the famous play by R. C. Carton, one of England's foremost playwrights. It is a story of the "forbidden fruit" of the Garden of Eden brought down to date. It teaches the folly of lust and luxury loving and through it all runs a romance of the sort we all approve.

SUGGESTIONS

Our advice to the exhibitor is to play up the notable cast headed by Mr. Warwick giving credit for the story to Mr. Carton, and then arouse interest by telling about the series of love affairs contracted by Kathryn Williams and which forms the principal part of the story. We would not attempt to point any moral but handle the production as a "vamp" picture which however has no suggestive scenes.

As a novelty advertising suggestion, the thought occurs to us that if you could find some of those old "tree of knowledge" prints which used to be a feature of the American "middle class" parlor it would be a decided hit.

CATCH LINES

The story of a woman devoid of a heart, who was willing to sell her soul for the luxuries of life, who went from one man to another with only a mercenary motive, who asked all and gave nothing. The story of a modern Lillith. What do you know of Lillith? Who was Lillith?

Time cures all wounds. It cured Nigel Stanyon's heartache, and when he again loved this time a woman who was worthy only the thought she could not forgive kept him silent.

"OTHER MEN'S SHOES"

(EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE)

Crauford Kent Seen in Dual Role

AS a story, "Other Men's Shoes" is undoubtedly an interesting narrative, possessing suspense and entertaining situations. As a piece of dramatic composition, it has one defect; it is ati-climatic. The first climax culminates in the middle of the pic- tre, but immediately another theme takes rise and receives develop- ent during the remaining reels of the production. Crauford Kent featured in a dual role—one part, portraying a mild-souled min- ter of the gospel, unfit to combat the enemies that confront him; ıd the other part, representing the "black-sheep" brother, strong, ırd-knuckled, aggressive, the direct counter-part of the peace-lov- g preacher.

The story narrates how the stronger twin-brother, stepping, in- gnito, into the "shoes" of the minister, sweeps all opposition be- re him and retains possession of his brother's pulpit (the first eme); and later how he perfects the parochial work of the tender- arted pastor, still incognito, and wins the hand of the woman he ves (second theme). The duality of the theme does not destroy e suspense qualities of the picture as a whole. The interest is sus- ined to the close.

The types are well-chosen, and despite an occasional tendency to over-act," the rendition of the leads and their supports is com- endable as a whole. Crauford Kent in his characterization of a fighting parson"; John P. Wade as a money-hardened scoundrel; d Harold Forshay in his portrayal of a wily blackmailer, stand out rominently. Altogether, this picture should register favorably with ı audience not too critical of the requirements of dramatic con- ruction.—Length, 7 reels.—E. F. Supple.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Stephen Browning has succeeded his dead ıther in the Montville pulpit. Weak, mild- ıannered, and tender-hearted, he proves un- ualified to cope effectively with the rough, ard conditions, confronting him in Mont- ille, and unable to set up any strong re- stance to the local magnate, Raphael reeke, who aspires to the hand of Stephen's weetheart, Irene Manton. Creeke, as a ıethod of persecuting his rival, organizes movement to oust the preacher from his ulpit. To this end he calls a meeting at hich the minister is to be officially re- ıoved from his pastorate, unless Stephen an effectually overcome the opposition. All hings are set for the preacher's deposi- ion, when an unexpected occurrence turns he tide of events against Creeke and his ollowers.

Stephen's twin-brother, "Jim," by dis- osition, a "rolling stone" and in char- cter, strong, hard-knuckled, and aggressive, rrives unseen at the Montville rectory, just s the stage is all set by Creeke for tephen's dismissal. "Jim's" close re- emblance to Stephen permits him to pass s the preacher in the disguise of Stephen's ninisterial garb. In his brother's pastoral apacity, "Jim" sweeps all opposition be- ore him and sets about to perfect his rother's parochial work.

Jacob Dreener, an associate of "Jim's" wanderlust days arrives in Montville, sees Creeke and offers to expose the fact that he minister has a "jailbird" brother with a view to turning the congregation against the minister and having him ex- pelled. "Jim" wrongly convicted has served a term in prison, so the plot prom- ses to reap a success for the rascals. How- ever, in carrying out the plans, Dreener ills Stephen. His crime is exposed by Stephen's sweetheart, and thereupon both Dreener and his accomplice in crime, Creeke, are taken into custody. The end finds 'Jim's" plans for parochial improvement ully realized and Irene Manton promised as his future wife.

SUGGESTIONS

There are a number of ways to exploit this feature. You might begin by publiciz- ing it far enough in advance as to arouse curiosity. Use a teaser campaign emphasiz- ng the title, using such questions as "Did you ever have a desire to fill another man's shoes? Don't do it unless you are sure of your man." What about catch lines? Surely the title can be exploited through them to advantage. We have written several which can be featured. For your newspaper copy you might use such a leader as "Try to Get Into 'Other Men's Shoes'!" Advertise through linking up with shoe stores. You can take window space by exploiting the shoes similar to those that Lincoln wore. Attached to them would be a sign reading: —"How would you like to have filled Lincoln's shoes?" You will certainly arouse interest if you advertise a free ticket to the picture for every child bringing a pair of old shoes. Feature the star and the director.

CATCH LINES

Did you ever have a desire to fill another man's shoes—a man who had met greater success than you? See "Other Men's Shoes," a picture presenting a gripping drama.

Do you believe that a man who had served in prison could step into the shoes of his minister brother?

"THE WOMAN IN THE SUIT CASE"

(INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

An Unusual Picture from Every Angle

THE ideal picture is one where a logical plot is well developed —into which is injected a high light of comedy relief—with a romance properly carried along until time for the "clutch," and which points a moral. All of these qualities are found in "The Woman in the Suitcase," therefore we accord this picture the full merit of praise conveyed in the second word of our opening paragraph.

The logical plot is a C. Gardner Sullivan creation about a girl who finds that her father is enamoured of a lady of the chorus and who attempts to cure him of his infatuation by associating herself with his amour and becoming her "pal." The comedy relief and romance are furnished by a young man who is hired by the daughter to escort her about while on her mission. The moral is quite evident when the father is confronted by his daughter in apparently a compromising situation and realizes his own violations of the moral code.

Credit for this being an unusual picture can be about equally divided between star, author, director and support. Enid Bennett is splendid in a role which fits her. Rodney Lee is better than that. The rest of the cast are more than good, and the direction of Mr. Gardner's practically perfect continuity is of the usual Thomas H. Ince calibre. Suspense is originated almost at the beginning and never is lost for an instant. Any person who cannot find entertainmet in this is surely hard to please.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Mary Moreland	Enid Bennett
Mr. Moreland	William Conklin
Mrs. Moreland	Claire McDowell
Dollie	Dorcas Matthews
Billie Fiske	Roland Lee
Doc Harrison	Donald McDonald
Ethel	Gladys George

Directed by Fred Niblo.
Supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince, C. Gardner Sullivan and a splendid supporting cast have equally contributed in making "The Woman in the Suitcase" which comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— run beginning ——— one of the most notable photoplays of the season.

With a story by Mr. Sullivan of merit seldom equalled even by this great writer of scenarios, Mr. Ince's studio staff have evolved a feature which is called by the reviewers "ideal." It offers Miss Bennett one of the best roles of her career, even when such wonderful pictures as her recent "Stepping Out" are considered.

There is comedy, drama and a moral to this story. You are entertained in the theatre and carry home a thought which tends to make your life, especially if you are a man, better, for this is the picture about a man who has stepped from the straight and narrow path to be brought to his senses by a lesson taught by his sweet and innocent young daughter.

It is not a preachment however. Just a human, heart interest story from real life, told as only a Thomas H. Ince cast and director can tell it.

In support of Miss Bennett are such well known players as William Conklin, Claire McDowell and a new leading man to most screen fans, Roland Lee who deserves great praise for contributing a delicious bit of acting as Billy Fiske, the young man Miss Bennett "hires" while investigating Broadway's "Great White Way."

PROGRAM READER

As a fitting successor of Enid Bennett's "Stepping Out" we offer this popular star for an engagement of ——— days beginning ——— in "The Woman in the Suitcase," a comedy drama from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan and of unusual story and entertainment value.

Miss Bennett has the role of a young lady who decides to become the pal of a woman of notorious character in the hope of curing her father's infatuation for "the other woman." Needing a male protector during this period she advertises for a young man and secures the son of the proprietor of the paper. Much of real drama follows when the acquaintance with "Dollie" is finally accomplished with a sprinkling of clean comedy furnished by Miss Bennett's "Man Friday."

Roland Lee has this role and shares acting honors with Miss' Bennett.

Enid Bennett in the "The Woman in the Suitcase"

SUGGESTIONS

Having a production with author, star and producer famous you should concentrate your exploitation on all three features with the promise of a picture of unusual story value, as an added incentive for seeing this particular feature.

The title is one which would lend itself well to a teaser campaign but we would not advise this in as much as there is little mystery evolved from the suitcase episode and this is cleared up in the early sequences.

Rather would we bill this from a more legitimate angle. Ask your female patrons what they would do if they learned that their father was enamored with a chorus girl. Then advise them to see what Enid Bennett does in this picture and decide which is the best plan. Ask the girls if they would smoke cigarettes, drink wine, submit to the attentions of a roue and pretend to be intoxicated in the hope of winning their father back from "the other woman." Excite interest by billing this as a problem play with a lesson for both men and women. Ask the men of your city what they would do if they thought their daughter had fallen, even if they had violated the moral code and stood face to face with her, each apparently guilty. There is also a chance to ask wives and mothers questions which will excite their interest in this picture.

Ever Try It?

¶ The publicity and advertising manager for the I. Libson chain of theatres in Cincinnati (Walnut, Strand, Family, Star, Bijou and Palace) accumulated a great stack of back copies of the Motion Picture News. "Hated to throw them away," he said. One day he decided he must stop saving The News. So he determined to tear out the reviews, the exploitation ideas, the producer advertising that would help him and any other stuff that he could use in the future. He began to tear out the pages—and when he was through he discovered there was so much stuff he wanted to keep and file away that he might as well save the entire magazine!

¶ "I never realized a trade paper was so valuable until I tried to stop saving the copies," said the publicity man.

A Government Resolution

"Be it resolved that it is the sense of the Joint Committee on Education of the United States Senate and House of Representatives that the motion picture industry of the United States be requested to do all that is within its power to upbuild and strengthen the spirit of Americanism within our people."

THE greatest motion picture of its kind ever seen, "The Copperhead", had just been made by Paramount when the above Resolution was passed

"The Copperhead" is a faithful screen reproduction of Augustus Thomas' greatest stage play. Lionel Barrymore's matchless acting in the title rôle can now be seen by the entire country

To see "The Copperhead" is to be born again as an American.

This motion picture will thrill millions of people as entertainment, but it will do more—it will show you that Love of Country is not simply a duty but the deepest root of personal happiness, lifting you above your own weaknesses, charging you with a strange new purpose in life

"THIS motion picture will thrill millions of people as entertainment but it will do more—it will show you that Love of Country is not simply a duty but the deepest root of personal happiness, lifting you above your own weaknesses, charging you with a strange new purpose in life."

That's the message the advertisement shown here will bring to over 30,000,000 souls in these United States,—lovers of dramatic entertainment, teachers, A. E. F. men, scholars, doctors, lawyers, ministers, professors, boys and girls, fathers and mothers and good Americans, all.

Secretary Franklin Lane said recently:

"I wish that 1920 may be a Lincoln year, a Lincoln year in which our people will learn to look at things through Lincoln's eyes—those kind, wise, steadfast, honest eyes—in which there was neither malice nor envy, but a great sympathy in a noble common sense. Why can't we make this 1920 a Lincoln year?"

It is a Lincoln year. The greatest success on the New York stage today is the play "Abraham Lincoln." And beginning now—just before Lincoln's birthday, the greatest success on the motion picture screen will be "The Copperhead" whose dramatic power, sublime appeal and inspired acting have never been equalled in motion pictures.

And the 30,000,000 readers of these magazines—readers of that advertisement—are prospective patrons for you:

A Great Picture with a Great Cast!

An old legend says that the tempter in Eden was not a serpent but a beautiful woman, Lillith, the demon wife of Adam before Eve was created.

No Matter What They Say

"'THE Tree of Knowledge' is a Paramount-Artcraft sample of what a motion picture intelligently directed by a man like William DeMille and crystallized from a good scenario by Margaret Turnbull can do toward helping one forget some film phantasms of the past."—N. Y. Sun.

"Margaret Turnbull has made a very intelligent scenario of R. C. Carton's melodrama 'The Tree of Knowledge' and William DeMille has contributed high class direction. The Parisian and English locations were carefully selected and there is a fine adherance to atmospheric detail. The whole presentation breathes class."—Variety.

"The play offered Paramount-Artcraft an excellent opportunity for a strong drama with keen human appeal. It is ably adapted and well presented."—Exhibitors Herald.

"In many respects a remarkable photoplay. Mr. Warwick a handsome and histrionically effective hero."—Evening Mail.

"Makes an excellent feature picture."—N. Y. Herald.

"All these values and the appreciation shown by a crowded house at the Rialto sum up in ranking 'The Tree of Knowledge' as a product generally and generously good." — Moving Picture World.

"Proves interesting alike for the story and the well-known cast. The story handled from an angle that holds attention."—N. Y. American.

"The story is nicely developed and the acting is of the very highest type."—Motion Picture News.

That's what the critics say in New York.

But here's the real point:

"The Tree of Knowledge" is a good picture that will please your audiences immensely, attract big business and make money for you.

No matter what the New York critics say!

A SMASHING HIT

THE THEATRES

OPERA HOUSE

"Alma Where Do You Live" opened at the Opera House yesterday to large and enthusiastic audiences who gave their whole hearted approval to this new form of entertainment. It is described as "a synchronized production."

The original score of "Alma Where Do You Live as produced for two years on Broadway is used. The plot, story and exteriors are shown in six reels of film, while the picture is cut where the musical song and dance numbers come and real performers are introduced.

Miss Delphia Daughn the featured dancer is wonderful and won rounds of applause. Mr. Robert Hall Russell has a pleasing voice of rare sweetness and was no small part of the production's entertainment.

The chorus is modest, capable and gorgeously costumed. The stage settings are entirely adequate and breathe a simple elegance that gives the artistic atmosphere so necessary for this class of production. The electric lighting effects are beautiful in the last degree.

"Alma Where Do You Live" appeals to every class of people and it's subtle sweetness comes like the breath of a spring flower.

"Alma Where Do You Live" will appear at the Opera House today and tomorrow, both afternoon and evening.

LIVE SPARKS

By CAROLINE SAYRE
Directed by ERNEST C. WARDE

There are not many screen stars who cause audiences everywhere to say: "I like that star." They say this about J. Warren Kerrigan.

There are really not many stars who invariably and without exception have perfect direction and technical production. All Kerrigan productions have both.

There are but few screen stars who persist in their popularity; who roll up increasing popularity that is traceable directly to themselves even without taking into account their stories, direction and production. J. Warren Kerrigan has grown consistently through sheer liking on the part of the public.

"Live Sparks," his latest production, will cause exhibitors and the public to like him still more.

WHAT SORT OF ATMOSPHERE GETS MONEY INTO YOUR BOX OFFICE?

That's a new angle! Have you ever given thought to it? You know, players and direction aside, that atmosphere in the picture is something to think about—that certain settings and locales do appeal to your audiences, while others miss. Which are the money-getting scenes? No surer guide to this vital box-office problem can be found than is presented by

Richard Harding Davis'

"SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE"

An Allan Dwan Production

Tiny scenes pull the spectators out of their seats and make whole audiences burst into applause. Ask Tom Moore, E. J. Bowes, Bernard Depkin, Ken Finlay, L. M. It Cost Realart—

No, you're mistaken; it isn't the same old story. This really concerns you—involves a fundamental principle.

MARY MILES MINTER'S

greatest motion picture

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES"

Directed by William Desmond Taylor

Scenario by Frances Marion, based on the four "Anne" books by L. M. Montgomery did cost Realart more than can be collected from it in rentals. There were two troubles—poor photography, due to the wettest summer in New England's history, and inadequate portrayal of some of the roles. There was one remedy—to return the whole company to New England and retake most of the scenes.

It was tough luck for an infant concern. But the answer was, and always will be: A production must be right, or be made right, before it can carry the Realart trade mark.

REALART PICTURES

And It Is Right!

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES" has brought more enthusiastic messages from exhibitors than have resulted from any five previous MARY MILES MINTER pictures! It has been shown at the Rivoli in New York; America, Denver; Rialto, Washington; Tivoli, San Francisco; New Miller, Los Angeles, and there has not yet been an unfavorable report. It is a picture with heart punch—with universal appeal—and it gets and holds the crowds!

They're All Talking about the remarkably natural transition of the heroine of

"ERSTWHILE SUSAN"

from a browbeaten, ignorant household drudge to the beautifully gowned, cultured wife of the Governor. There have been few greater character interpretations in the history of the screen than that by

CONSTANCE BINNEY

Direction of JAMES S. ROBERTSON,

in the role of Barnabetta Dreary. Usually, you know, audiences must imagine such a transition. In "ERSTWHILE SUSAN," they see it!

That is one reason the stage play was such a success when Mrs. Fiske appeared in it. That's one reason so many thousands have read the book, "Barnabetta" by Helen R. Martin, on which the play is based. That's one reason this Constance Binney picture has been marching across the country to the sweet music of steadily click-click-clicking turnstiles.

Jake Nuddle was born in America.

A Play for Head and Heart

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER" is both beverage and tonic. While it pleases the palate as rare entertainment it will inspire the soul with a new birth of optimism. Those who see it will smack their lips and grit their teeth. It is a picture that carries a strong message of hope. It is a story made of man-skin, written from the inkwell of reality; two fistfulls of life pulled out of the mass.

That universal regret among the younger generation of theatregoers, who missed seeing "THE FORTUNE HUNTER" during its memorable and record-breaking stage career, shall be banished. No longer need they be envious of their elders. For these latter it will be a past treat revived. What it was as a stage play and a novel it is even greater as a photoplay. Graham Baker, who wrote the screen version, has brought out all of the author's subtleties and EARLE WILLIAMS has made the hero an excellent object lesson for all young men. TOM TERRISS directed it and the total result of all this effort has been a special production that is naturally bigger and better than the stage play could have been.

What It Did and Will Do

A Stage Success at the Gaiety Theatre on Broadway for forty-nine weeks.

A Novel that always was a "best seller" and always will be as long as people read.

To satisfy the clamor after it took Broadway by storm, road shows played it in every city of 20,000 and upwards.

Its author, Winchell Smith, has never been guilty of anything but success, witness: "TURN TO THE RIGHT" and the latest breaker of records---"LIGHTNIN'".

Now, made into a delightful special photoplay production, it will gather a new harvest of popularity; a new and greater glory for itself and sow its logic and laughs broadcast once again.

OUR activities and energies are dedicated to the principle of artistic achievement.

We shall establish our standard on story values.

The policy on which we have organized is first, last and all the time good stories.

We shall place judgment upon our material only insofar as our staff finds the stories adaptable for picturization. We aim to picturize only big-selling books and successful plays that have great picture value. At the present time we have more of this material than we can produce in several years.

To assist the " box office " pull of a good story, exhibitors have united in advising us to use " stars," but not to change the story to suit the talents of a star—the story is the thing. We will get picture-stars to fit our picture-stories.

Our methods for insurance of success are– -first, picture stories; second, directors and players selected to suit the story; third, perfection of organization to mould these elements and to place them on the screen.

THE chief executives are Arthur F. Beck and Charles C. Burr. In a silent capacity there are aligned others with big interests in the picture field and a thorough knowledge of world wide film conditions.

Arthur F. Beck is well known to exhibitors, having spent more than ten years in the distributing end of the business, where he obtained invaluable experience in market values. This has enabled him to make strong "box office" pictures independently. Mr. Beck will bring this experience to the bigger GIBRALTAR PICTURES.

Charles C. Burr has been associated with Famous Players-Lasky and Paramount for five years with a varied experience in a managerial and executive capacity and will act with GIBRALTAR PICTURES in the capacity of General Manager.

Today competition in the exhibiting branch of the industry is most severe, keeping "open time" for the independent producers may be your salvation.

Your net profit on GIBRALTAR PICTURES may let you out on the year and still buy the pictures on which you get only prestige.

Standing By Our Guns

¶ "Lay off this percentage business" advises an exhibitor. "We don't want it."
In response to which we advise in return that we won't lay off any matter which, in our opinion, promotes the general welfare of the business.

We won't until our opinion is changed: and thus far no arguments against percentage have been advanced.

We prophesy moreover that so important a subject can not be suppressed at any source: it underlies, broadly and basically, the whole business and it will keep bobbing up right along until it is satisfactorily settled.

We wish, however, to make our own position clear.

We do not advocate percentage as it now exists.

We do not advocate any percentage arrangement, past, present or future.

We do however believe in some percentage arrangement; we believe, too, that some percentage arrangement is inevitable: we believe it is inevitable because it is in the exhibitor's and the producer's best interests.

So we aired the subject hoping that an open discussion might lead to that "some" arrangement which exhibitor and producer would pronounce fair and satisfactory to each.

When that question is settled a great deal of the unrest within this business will be settled—unrest which often reaches large and ominous proportions—unrest which appears in other guises entirely.

The exhibitor, whether he realizes it or not, wants percentage most of all.

When the flat rental system came into being films were novelties, and not the dramatic offerings of today.

People came because films were being shown: today they attend theatres because of what films are being shown. They shop. The film, not merely films, is the attraction.

From a show angle, therefore, the business is completely changed. The appeal is now a dramatic one. We are in the theatrical class where percentage has long been the method of doing business and where the proposition of a flat rental system would be laughed at.

Yet the relation between exhibitor and producer is still determined by a system which today is just as inadequate as pictures today are different and picture theatres are different and the whole public appeal is different from the novelty order, you might almost say the penny arcade order, of more than a decade ago.

Exhibitors write us that the business is full of "fake" and "bunk": that pictures are over advertised: that they don't know what they are getting, that they are at the mercy of unscrupulous salesmen, etc.

Very well. These abuses are direct results of a flat rental system. They won't disappear until pictures are bought upon their merits—through percentage.

Exhibitors complain about so called "specials." When the first real "special" appeared it was hailed with delight. Today the "special" is viewed with distrust. Naturally. The market was flooded with "specials" in name only, "specials" so nominated, not by the picture's merits but by the salesman's say-so, "specials" deserving the name only because "special" money was asked.

Very well. This sort of "special" is the direct result of the flat rental system. "Special" money for inferior goods can only be had through bluff. And you can bluff with a flat rental system. You can't with percentage. With percentage the picture earns the money; with a flat rental the salesman earns it.

Sane Talk on Censorship

THE motion picture industry and The Delineator are to be congratulated on an article appearing in the January number of that publication. The author, Rita S. Halle, conveys to a large and important section of public opinion some sane thoughts on the problem of film censorship.

After reviewing the fact which can hardly be denied, that many motion pictures and many of the smaller theatres are not ideal for younger children, the article goes on to say:

"The parents' next plea is for a censorship.

"Censorship, however, is purely destructive. Destroying the poor pictures that do exist does not create good pictures nor educate a taste for them.

"Furthermore, innumerable pictures that ought to be censored out of existence for children, are not only harmless but often actively beneficial to adults. Our good libraries have distinct and separate departments for adults and children.

"Pictures that children see should not simply be expurgated adult pictures, but pictures chosen especially for them. Even the most radical parent would hardly ask the State to do this.

"So it comes back to the parents after all—as everything that has to do with the child always does. The law, teh State, the school, the Sunday-school—nothing can take the parents' place. And in this particular issue, condemnatory destructive criticism is of no avail.

"The motion-picture has its place, and a very important one, in our modern scheme of things. It is a settled factor in our social life; a democratic, inexpensive place, where the poorest can find release from care, and live vicariously the lives of the more fortunate for a few hours.

"The motion-picture can be made, if a community cares enough, an active factor for good, not only for the overburdened adult who needs it so much, but for the child who demands it as well. It is simply a matter of educating the community taste up to the best that there is in motion-pictures.

"The reason that it has been so perverted is that the exhibitor is in business for money and not for philanthropic reasons. In a town of twenty thousand, he cannot cater to a possible two hundred persons who want better pictures for themselves and their children. He must cater to the other nineteen thousand eight hundred, and the two hundred must get what they want and then educate the rest up to their standard."

The author then reviews several successful efforts at community activity—in some cases through local cooperation with exhibitors, in others, where there was no theatre, through church and school shows.

Those Ten Per Cent Figures

EXHIBITORS in middle-sized and smaller communities are still waxing wrathful over our statement that producers are only reciving ten per cent of the gross income of the motion picture business.

They tell us, without exception, that they are paying from twenty-five to fifty per cent of their box office receipts for film rental. In some cases the figures run even higher.

Of this fact we were aware when we made our original declaration. A good share of the exhibitors—by far the majority in point of numbers—are carrying the bag for the industry and paying rentals that run close to their receipts.

But the ten per cent figure is right—and the only conclusion left is that some other exhibitors—not so many in numbers, but of vastly greater importance in point of seating capacity and box office intake—are escaping their just due.

Keep yelling—Mr. Eighty Per Center. We are with you! Only don't blame us for the figures. They are woven of fact. If your isolated case does not agree with them—then someone else must be wrong.

Who is it?

"Legit," Vaudeville, or Pictures?

MORRIS GEST has become exercised to the point of many newspaper columns over the interest Wall Street is showing in the motion picture industry. His solicitude is not for film men, but for the spoken drama which is losing out in the race for financial sustenance.

It is difficult to understand the point of Mr. Gest's remarks. As the New York World points out, an institution which can secure the prices New York speculators now ask for ordinary shows does not seem in danger of bankruptcy.

And we might add that an institution which can ask the present "road show" prices for the current caliber of road show might well look closer to home when seeking reasons for its failure in competition with the picture theatre.

Wall Street or no Wall Street, competition is still competition. And the institution that provides the best entertainment for the least money will win out in the race for public favor.

If that day should ever come when motion picture men reach the class of "gougers" they, too, will feel the reaction.

Standing By Our Guns

(Coninued from preceding page)

The larger question—and very large it is—which underlies the matter is this:

This business needs stabilization. It will have stabilization.

The exhibitor must be stabilized; the producer must be stabilized.

The producer wants, and deserves, and must have an assured outlet for his pictures: the exhibitor wants, deserves and must have an assured supply of pictures.

We mean the worth-while producer; the worth-while exhibitor.

The producer must be encouraged to make the best possible pictures; the exhibitor must have the best possible pictures.

Right here, in a nut shell is the present day riddle of this business.

The effort to solve it is back of every big movement in this business right now. Whoever does solve it will be the most powerful factor in the business. Exhibitor and producer must be brought together upon a new basis, satisfactory to each.

But this much is certain: there won't be any solution, there won't be any sound and enduring relation made between producer and exhibitor until confidence between them is established.

We don't mean sentimental confidence: we mean business confidence.

And business confidence must be based upon the goods sold—how they are sold.

This selling must be stabilized—else there'll be no stability to this business, nor to any factor in it.

To speak of this as the fifth industry, to rank it with the great industries of the world and then to admit that its goods are sold by poker-playing is—to laugh.

We realize perfectly that films can never be standardized in quality and price like other goods.

Just the same they can be sold on test, on their merits; and the earnings can be satisfactorily divided between the maker and exhibitor of them, so that each can do for the other what the other wants and what their mutual interests demand.

This can be done.

And, as cerainly as this business continues—it will be done.

Again we recite the caption of our first editorial, which originated the trade discussion: "Percentage is coming."

It is coming.

But again, we remind our exhibitor friend: We say, some percentage arrangement is coming.

Is Springfield a "Typical" City?

We Sought a Typical "Middle-Size" City For a Summary on Percentage — Here's What Springfield, Illinois, Reported

BY W. F. DAGON

Of the Illinois State Journal

SPRINGFIELD motion picture exhibitors—the big fellows—are dead set against the percentage plan of booking pictures. This was discovered after a canvass of the first run houses. The arguments set forth by those opposing the plan are here given, and it must be admitted they sound like common sense.

Nowadays it is customary for the producers of big or special pictures to send down a special man to book the new production. Tucked carefully away in a notebook is a record that tells in plain figures that "John Smith" of Springfield pays big prices for the good pictures. His price for a week on "Good Enough For You" was $2000.

So the salesman is instructed when he leaves the home office to sell Smith "Why We Eat" for not less than that amount. This picture is as good as the other one— the film company thinks so—and it should get as much money.

But John Smith flatly refuses to pay $2000 for the new picture. He won't pay a nickle over $1500. All the argument in the world will not change his mind. This is where the salesman smiles and pulls his prize proposition. He will play the picture on percentage!

HOWEVER, there is nothing doing with the leading exhibitors of Springfield. They will not play on percentage. And this is why they will not. For years they have been advertising their theatres. Their patrons know they try and give them as good pictures as can be secured. They have established a steady patronage which runs into considerable money every week. No matter what kind of a picture they show they will do a certain amount of business. Some of them play to near capacity all the time. Now why should they book a picture and give a share of the regular business they would get anyway to the film company? That is the answer you will invariably get when you talk percentage here. Springfield exhibitors would rather pay a flat rental and not have percentage.

Say a theatre runs along and shows a profit of a thousand dollars a week, showing only regular program stuff. If a special is booked on the percentage plan, the admission price is increased—which makes some of the "regulars" sore—heavy advertising is done, and there are other expenses added. It will have to be a pretty good week to make the exhibitor come out with more than a thousand dollars for his share. Of course this applies to cities of Springfield's size, and does not have any bearing on the larger cities.

But now with the smaller fellows, the second run houses, the percentage plan meets with favor. Most of them are not paying a fancy price for their service anyway, so when something that looks good comes along they are willing to give it a whirl. The other picture they can put on the shelf, or have it set back at the booking office. The percentage plan looks fine to most of them. To think they will not have to pay out any regular price for the picture, that half of the advertising will be paid for by the film man, all has an appeal which sounds sweet. In most cases the returns show a larger sum than if the regular program had been run, all due to proper exploitation, increased admission and perhaps a decorated lobby.

The chances are that the manager of the theatre who has just run a percentage picture will go to bed kicking himself for being a dumb fool for not booking it at a flat rental and getting all the profits instead of giving half of them to the film company. However, this does not apply to all.

BUT the idea of going on a percentage basis all of the time does not seem to meet with much favor. Perhaps it is because the theatres are able to do pretty good business the year round and come out with a nice balance on the right side of the ledger. The percentage plan would appeal more to a house that was not showing a profit every week.

Fellows like Bill Watts of the Vaudette, Harry Loper of the Lyric, Harry Thornton of the Gaiety, and Ed Kunz of the Princess, can tell very closely what the week's business will be on a certain attraction, unless unforseen things enter into the arrangement. Of course, if it rains, storms or becomes excessively hot, there will probably be a falling off on certain days. I have known some of the men to guess within ten dollars of the week's receipts.

Now these men know what they can do in seven days. They know what they can pay for a picture, and can come mighty near judging how a production is going to take. It is not a great deal of guesswork on their part to know how much will be left on Saturday night when all the bills are paid. They can come close to telling. So it is a hard proposition to convince them that a new picture just coming out will draw more than some of the good ones already played, and that it should be paid at a higher rate. They have a maximum price and cannot go beyond it. They also have a maximum admission price and will not go beyond that. And they know their capacity. So it looks as though the exhibitor has a right to stand firm and say he will not and cannot pay the sum asked. That gets back to the percentage plan.

Another objection to the percentage plan with some exhibitors is that they do not want the film companies to know what business they are doing. Of course the film company would know if the theatre was run on that basis. The chances are that most of the theatres in the country are making a good profit on all pictures, with only an occasional loser. Some of them are paying too much for some pictures and too little for others, but just try and find out if you can which ones they are paying too little for. They will readily admit the ones that do not pay. But the good draws and the extraordinary draws are not separated so you can tell which is which.

SPRINGFIELD has less population than Peoria. Exhibitors here say they pay more for pictures than is paid in the other city. Yet Peoria theatres do a bigger business because of having more people to draw from. Their house expenses are perhaps no higher than Springfield. So it will be seen that theatres here cannot possibly show as big a profit as the Peoria houses. Competition for pictures here is keen, the good ones being grabbed up quickly and at big prices. It is understood that in Peoria the competition is not so keen and so the film companies do not get as high rentals. The new houses being erected in the distillery city will probably result in spirited bidding for the new and better photoplays.

In summing up, it looks as though the percentage plan does not appeal to the big fellows here, that it has a certain advantage to offer to the littler fellows, and that it does not take at all with the exhibitor who is doing well every week.

Then there is the element of showmanship which also enters into the running of a theatre. An exhibitor likes to book pictures, pay a price he thinks will be profitable to him, take a chance of coming out on the long end and throw out his chest when he learns that he has "cleaned up" on a certain attraction. It pleases him to know his judgment was right, proves to him he is really a showman and not a blacksmith, as some of his enemies have at times insinuated, and that he is working at a vocation to which he is adapted and suited. No, not just yet, anyway—Springfield is not ready for percentage.

Censorship Discussion at the Capital

Committees of New York State Mayors Will Meet in Albany on Feb. 2; General Opinion is No Need Exists for Further Laws

THE second meeting of the committee formed by the State Conference of Mayors to investigate the need of further censorship of motion pictures in this State, will be held in Albany on February 2, at which time, the various sub-committees will report. The outcome of these reports will be carried to the mid-winter meeting of the Mayors' Conference and later on form the backbone of recommendations which the conference will make to the Legislature in the way of bills of interest to the motion picture industry.

Contrary to its usual custom, the State Conference of Mayors will not introduce the bills directly, but will place at the disposal of the judiciary committee of the Legislature the information which, through the committee just formed is now being gained. In other words, the Conference will tell the Legislature the problem and offer suggestions as to its solution through the passage of further laws.

Getting your picture "took" is part of a banquet. This is the Sales Service Dept. of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. at their annual dinner held this year Jan. 5th

Personnel of Committees

W. P. Capes, secretary of the Conference, and the one instrumental in selecting the committee, returned from New York and expressed himself as well satisfied with what was accomplished at the two-day session last week and at which Rex Beach, the author, was chosen as chairman of a sub-committee to inform itself on state censorship matters. Associated with Mr. Beach on this committee are: James P. Holland, president of the State Federation of Labor and R. Andrew Hamilton of Rochester.

The other three committees, of equal importance, are made up of the following: National Board of Review, Walter W. Nicholson of Syracuse, commissioner of public safety; Rev. Chas. O. Judkins, Glens Falls; Mrs. N. B. Spalding, Schenectady; present laws, Gabriel L. Hess, Mary Gray Peck and A. E. Smith, all of New York; local regulations, Dr. Everett D. Martin, New York; Mrs. Howard Ganz of the Federation of Child Study and Walter Hayes of Buffalo. Already Mr. Capes has supplied these sub-committees with considerable information not only in regard to what the cities in this State are doing but what other cities in the United States have accomplished in these four distinct lines.

During its sessions in New York, the committee visited the Talmadge and Famous-Players studios, in order that certain members might become better acquainted with the time and expense required in the making of a picture. The committee also visited the National Board of Review in order to ascertain the procedure that was followed by that body.

It is expected that the first bill of interest to the motion picture industry will be introduced in the Legislature some time in February. Whether or not there will be any further bills along this line will largely depend on the meeting here February 2. Both senators and assemblymen are open in stating today that in their opinion there is little or no need of further censorship in this State, and that the situation so far as immoral pictures is concerned is being very ably handled by the Board of Review. This in itself indicates that a purely out and out censorship bill, placing further expense and restrictions on the making of a picture, will find hard sledding during the days to come.

There is one phase of the situation, however, that has already attracted the attention of the legislature. It is felt that too often motion pictures are being exploited these days by sensational lithographs in front of the theatres themselves, frequently worded in a suggestive manner and intending to convey a rather false impression of the picture itself. This matter has been given some attention already and some provision may be made that will serve to regulate this type of advertising.

HOLLAND BIDS FOR FILM EXPOSITION

WORD has been received by T. Greidanus, importer, that a committee has been formed in Holland to arrange for the holding of an International Moving Picture Exposition in Amsterdam sometime during the present year.

The chairman of this committee is Mr. Joh. Gildemeyer, who is undoubtedly well known among the moving picture industry in the United States, the same as in Europe. It is the intention that the exposition will cover the moving picture industry in all its branches, while in connection with same conventions will be held where lectures will be delivered concerning various subjects connected with the industry.

Jesse L. Goldberg has reconsidered his resignation from the Frohman Amusement Corp., which was announced last week and he will remain with the company as Secretary and General Manager.

Buffalo Exhibitors Protest

Alleged Sensational Ads of One House the Cause; The News Rejects the Ads

THE Buffalo Evening News has set an excellent example for other newspapers to follow according to the New's correspondent by rejecting advertising submitted by the Family theatre, Buffalo, on a film called "Are You Fit To Marry?" The Family placed displays of a most sensational character which brought forth complaints by leading citizens and film men with the result that Edward H. Butler, editor and proprietor of the News ordered the ads out of the paper, started an investigation to learn how the ads originally got into the News and told his advertising manager that hereafter all ads of a similar character were to be refused.

Following the publication of the advertisements in the local press, several film men are said to have complained to the mayor and chief of police with the result that a policewoman was sent to review the film at the Family. She declared that the film itself was not objectionable but that the advertising was misleading. One of the ads in Monday, January 12 issue of the News said that "this picture is positively offensive."

The matter was taken up at a meeting of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' association where a committee was named to wait on the mayor and chief of police to protest against any films being shown to segregated audiences, which was done in the Family case. Ira M. Mosher, president of the association and J. H. Michael of the Victoria and Regent visited the city hall, found the mayor out of the city and put the case up to Commissioners Ross Graves and John F. Malone, but were told that the proposition was one which should be taken up with the mayor and the police department.

In spite of all the complaints and protests, the picture was shown all week at the Family and all the other Buffalo papers carried the ads. Local exhibitors are up in arms over this sort of advertising. They claim that if a picture is not good enough to show to mixed audiences it is not good enough to show at any time.

Bostick is the present manager.

Arthur Kane Pictures Corp. Formed

Mystery As to Future Activities of Former Realart Head Dispelled; Charles Rae Signed to Star in Production, and Will Soon Start Work

THE expected announcement of Arthur S. Kaue as to his plans for the future came forth last week in the shape of word of the formation of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, with offices at 452 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Mr. Kane is president of the concern and heavily interested financially, it is announced. The incorporation comes but a week after Mr. Kane's return from the coast, but in that time the offices have been fully equipped and everything is ready for business.

At a luncheon given Jan. 21 Mr. Kane announced to trade press representatives that Charles Rae would star in productions of his company. It is said the juvenile star will start work on a production for Kane Pictures about the first of March, his contract with Thomas H. Ince expiring Jan. 21, though he still had work to do on his last picture.

Kane Always Active Force

It is not generally known that for the past three and one-quarter years Mr. Kane has been with the same firm. Because of the rapidity with which he put over different new enterprises he was constantly called upon to organize new promotions owned largely or wholly by his firm. The fact that each of these enterprises was called by a different name and none of them was publicly at the time announced as a subsidiary or associated concern of the main corporation has caused many persons in the trade to believe that Mr. Kane has changed companies frequently. Such is not the case, however, for he has been a member of Famous Players-Lasky organization ever since September, 1916.

Beginning with September 1, 1916, Mr. Kane organized the eleven western states for Artcraft Pictures Corporation, then just going into business, and operated them until June 14, 1917. It is said the organization which Mr. Kane built up on the Pacific Coast held all records in the Artcraft institution. At this time his headquarters were in San Francisco. So successful was he that when Artcraft was merged with Paramount Pictures Corporation, Mr. Kane was brought east and assigned the task of organizing, as General Manager, the distribution system of the newly formed Select Pictures Corporation. He took charge July 31 of the concern which became on August 4, Select.

In April, 1919, after twenty-one months as General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation, the sale of its interest in that insitution by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation drew Mr. Kane back again into the central organization. It was then that he conceived Realart Pictures Corporation. After arranging for its formation he spent the month of May up in Connecticut leading the outdoor life getting ready for the grind which he knew was ahead. Returning to New York on June 2 he on June 9 opened the doors of Realart, of which he had been made President.

"I believe the best years of this industry are still ahead," said Mr. Kane at the headquarters of his new com-

Definite Details of Plans of Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays Given Out

DEFINITE details with regard to the arrangement whereby the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, Quebec, becomes the Canadian distributor for fourteen different British film producers have been released and the names of interests affected by the plan have been divulged. Incidentally, the information has been forthcoming that the directors of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, which controls the Canadian rights to releases of the fourteen British film companies, include a number of prominent and wealthy Canadians.

The British producers interested include Hepworth Picture Plays, British and Colonial Films, Butcher Films, Bertram Phillips Films, The Broadwest Company, Harma, Ideal, Famous Pictures, Master, Stoll, Violet Hopson, Barker and Windsor Companies.

The head of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, is Capt. J. B. MacKay, a veteran of the Great War, who also is interested in the Marshall-MacKay Syndicate of London. The Anglo-Canadian Company has an office in London, England, while its Canadian headquarters are in St. James Street, Montreal, where no less than forty features were gathered before any word was forthcoming that the company was preparing to invade Canada. This invasion of Canada has resulted in wide and lengthy comment in Canadian newspapers and it is apparent that a number of the Canadian writers have now taken a stand against film productions which have had their origin in the United States.

One of the directors of the Anglo-Canadian Company is Colonel Ernest Chambers of Ottawa, Ontario, who served as Chief Press Censor in Canada during the war. Another Ottawa man who is financially interested is Capt. Milton F. Gregg who won both the Victoria Cross and the Military Cross while serving with the Canadian Corps in France. Louis Cote, an Ottawa lawyer, Albert MacLaren of Buckingham, Quebec, a prominent lumber man and Lieut.-Col. John McCombe of the Welland Ship Canal, St. Catharines, Ontario, are also directors.

A number of the British releases were privately screened in Montreal early in January after which prints were shipped to various cities for release in February. Mr. MacKay sailed for England on January 10 to make arrangements for the shipment of more releases to the Dominion.

Loew Buys New Site for Big Newark Theatre

An announcement has just been received to the effect that the Frank G. Shattuck Company of New York and Boston has sub-leased for a period of 63 years an extensive tract of property in Newark to Marcus Loew for the erection by the latter of a new theatre on the site. The property involved runs from 635 to 641 Broad street and from 2 to 20 New Street. A lease has also been secured by Loew on the property 22 and 24 New street. .The theatre to be constructed will cost not less than $1,000,000, it is stated, and will have a seating capacity of 2,500. Construction plans are in the hands of Thomas W. Lamb, of New York.

Three Big Houses Being Built in Los Angeles

A ninety-nine year lease was signed and delivered last week by Arthur Letts to Ackerman and Harris, owners of the Hippodrome circuit of vaudeville theatres, for property on the southwest corner at the intersection of Broadway and Seventh Streets, Los Angeles. The lease cost the theatrical firm more than twelve million and a half and is for a property 170-190 feet, it is stated.

The seating capacity will be in the neighborhood of 3000, and the stage will be of such dimensions and have such equipment that it can, in short space of time, be changed into a theatre that will meet the requirements of any kind of a production.

This is the third big theatre now under construction in Los Angeles. The site for Grauman's Metropolitan, which will have a seating capacity of more than 4000, is now being cleared, and actual construction work will be commenced by February 1. The other big theatre is that of Alexander Pantages at the corner of 7th & Hill Streets. Practically all exterior construction work is now completed.

United Closes Three Important Deals

In Addition to Taking Over Triangle Exchanges Company Gets Some S. A. Lynch Branches and Distribution Rights to Hallmark

THE taking over of the Triangle Exchanges, securing distribution rights of Hallmark pictures, and the taking over of the exchanges of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises in Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Kansas City, Omaha and St. Louis, constitute three important deals, consummation of which were announced by United Picture Productions Corporation last week.

The deal with the Hallmark Company was closed late last week and the arrangement covers the distribution of the Hallmark pictures, which means that United will handle a very excellent line of productions, and in the future serve all the exhibitors who book the Hallmark pictures.

" In acquiring the rights to releasing pictures of the Hallmark Corporation," declared Mr. Berst, " United has taken another step in its natural growth."

Plan Great System

" Through our assuming control of the Triangle exchanges, United has come into possession of a perfect distributing system and it is only natural that producing companies will seek to release their products through United.

" It is planned to make United Exchanges one of the largest distributing organizations in the world. Nothing short of this will satisfy the men who have put their heart and soul behind United. Plans are already on foot for United to produce twenty-six features a year. The priceless Triangle negatives featuring such stars as William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Frank Keenan, Norma and Constance Talmadge, the Gish sisters, Dorthy Dalton, Charles Ray, Louis Glaum, Olive Thomas and many other box office attractions will be released in their recreated form through United. Added to this list are the productions formerly released through Hallmark Pictures Corporation. This will give United a feature release of at least one each week."

In commenting on his arrangements with United, Mr. Hall of the Hallmark Corporation had this to say:

" I feel sure that the service which will be rendered through the efforts of the United organization will be as near 100% as possible. In forming this opinion, I am taking into consideration the wide experience United's president, Mr. Berst, has had in handling a national organization.

" The special productions which are ready for immediate and near-future release through the United Exchanges include 'High Speed' with Gladys Hulette and Edward Earle; 'Chains of Evidence' with Edmund Breese, Marie Shotwell and Anna Lehr; 'The Veiled Marriage' with Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard; 'Wits Versus Wits' with Margaret Marsh; 'Carmen of the North' with Anna Bos, and 'What Children Will Do' starring Edith Stockton. We will also release through United our serials, 'The Screaming Shadow' with Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber and 'The Evil Eye'

AN EXHIBITOR NOT GOVERNED BY FIRST RUN POLICY

AS a means of raising the general standard of the productions to be included on the program of the Gordon Theatre at Rochester, N. Y., Manager William Shannon has announced that he will no longer be governed absolutely by the " first run " policy which heretofore has been rigidly adhered to at the Gordon. Mr. Shannon declares that exhibitors generally are below the highest standard of productions they could reach because of refusal to play a picture which they overlooked or couldn't squeeze into their program when it was first released, by foolish adherence to the first run fetish.

" If the best productions came along regularly, one produced each week and one released each week," says Mr. Shannon in discussing the change in policy, " the best standard, could be attained by only using first runs. The truth of the matter is however that a bunch of releases, every one of them top-notch, come at the same time and unless a manager is able to book two or three of them for the same time they are no longer first run when he can arrange to have them on his program.

New Offices Opened to Handle Equity Films

T. E. Larson, head of the Peacock Productions, Inc., Tulsa, Okla., which organization controls the Equity Pictures for Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, has opened offices at 1713½ Commerce Street, Dallas, Texas, and 3316 Lindell Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo., with the Kansas City office to be opened later.

Mr. Larson is in charge of the general executive work, with executive offices in the Drexel Building, Tulsa, Okla. Glenn Condon is located at the Dallas office, and G. F. Hennessy is in charge at St. Louis.

CAMERAGRAPH CLUB HOLDS ITS SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING

THE semi-annual meeting of the Cameragraph Club composed of officers and employees of the Nicholas Power Company, was held at the offices of the company on Tuesday, January 20, with T. F. Uhlemann in the chair.

The officers of the Club are as follows: President, Theo. F. Uhlemann, Works Manager; Vice President, Raymond Dengel, Milling Dept.; Sec'y. & Treasurer, Bennet Goldsmith, Factory Accountant. The honorary members are Edward Earl, President, Alfred D. Bell, Treasurer, Will C. Smith, General Manager, and S. S. Cassard, Sales Manager.

Some of the members of the Cameragraph Club have been with the Nicholas Power Company for nearly twenty years, which by the way is a long, long time in the motion picture industry. The Cameragraph Club is evidence of the good will existing between the officers and employees of the Nicholas Power Company.

Loew to Build in Baltimore

$1,000,000 House Will be Erected, to be Largest in City; Another New House

THE rumor that the motion picture producers were contemplating the erection of a theatre in Baltimore to furnish a first run field for some of their features has been set definitely at rest by the announcement that Marcus Loew, Inc., will build a $1,000,000 playhouse in that city. The structure will be the largest of its kind in Baltimore and will have a seating capacity of 3,000. It will be devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures, but in addition to those features will have a ballroom. It will be located at Charles street and North avenue.

Details of the plan were announced on Saturday following a meeting of the directors of the Hippodrome Theatre, another playhouse operated by Loew in Baltimore. At that meeting a message from Mr. Loew to the people of Baltimore in which the theatrical man declared that in view of the vast development of theatrical enterprises throughout the country, Baltimore had been left far behind, was read.

It is understood that a local organization with officers composed of Baltimoreans will direct the theatre under the supervision of Loew. Many persons of that city have already offered to subscribe to the stock. Work on the structure will not begin until next summer and the theatre will probably not be open until the first part of 1921.

On top of the announcement of the plans for his theatre comes word that the owners of the Wilson theatre, Baltimore street near Holliday, have purchased the Church of the Messiah which adjoins the rear of the playhouse and will utilize the space for enlarging their structure. The church site covers about 200 by 100 feet and is said to have cost the theatre company $195,000. The purchasers have not yet announced their plans in detail but it is believed that the structure will be devoted to moving pictures, entirely.

Chicago Film Men to Have Legion Post

War veterans who are connected with the film business are to have their own American Legion post in Chicago. It will be known as Cinema Post. A charter has been applied for, and the granted charter is expected to arrive in Chicago in the near future.

When the charter is received invitations to join will be extended to all Chicago former service men in any way connected with motion pictures—directors, actors, exchange men, projector operators, laboratory workers, theatres employes, etc.

An American Legion post for film folk was suggested at the annual dinner of Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. workers several weeks ago. Watterson R. Rothacker appointed a committee to get busy. Later Mr. Rothacker suggested the name for the post.

The following Rothacker men comprised the fifteen necessary to apply for a charter: John Hahn, assistant secretary-treasurer; George Gibson, factory superintendent; Ray Aitken, William H. Stafford, E. A. Bertram, George J. Kilgore, Carl Lorang, Frank Koch, Fred Niemann, Ernest Newmann, L. J. Siakel, John Hubacek, Al Peterson, Walter Larson and Cecil Weber.

Mr. Hahn, who is temporary secretary-treasurer, hopes the Cinema Post will achieve a membership of 300.

Frank Miller Receives Capitol Appointment

Another appointment to the staff of the Capitol theatre was announced by Managing Director Edward Bowes, when Frank O. Miller, manager of the Manhattan Opera House, was named as assistant to the managing director. Mr. Miller will enter upon his new duties within ten days.

Three Day Session of Board of Directors Ended; Voting Trust Arragement Decided On Said to Protect Members Against Monopoly

COMPLETING on January 21 the details of a voting trust arrangement which is said to be an absolute protection for independent exhibitors against the inroads of any financial interests seeking theatre monopoly or theatre control, the eleven directors of Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, adjourned a three days' meeting in New York with an announcement of the names of the exhibitor members of the Board of Voting Trustees, the officers, and the members of the Executive Committee of the new organization, together with a statement of the purposes which actuated the members in creating the Board of Voting Trustees.

The Board of Voting Trustees, elected by the directors, consists of Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, N. H. Gordon, of Boston, R. M. Finkelstein of Rubin and Finkelstein, Minneapolis, Fred Dahnken of Turner and Dahnken, San Francisco, and J. G. Von Herberg of Jensen and Von Herberg, Seattle.

Officers Elected

Robert Lieber was elected President of Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, J. B. Clark of Pittsburgh was named First Vice-President, Jacob Fabian of New Jersey, Second Vice-President; Harry O. Schwalbe, Secretary-Treasurer, and J. D. Williams, manager of the new enterprise.

The Executive Committee, which will be the official administrative body for the directors and officers, also was elected by the directors with Harry O. Schwalbe as the Chairman, N. H. Gordon and Moe Mark, of the Mark Strand Company, New York.

The meeting of the eleven directors in New York began as an adjourned session of the convention in Atlantic City, at which members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit gathered to complete plans for the new Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, and the Associated First National Theatres, Incorporated.

The assembly in New York was for the purpose of electing officers, the members of the Executive Committee and the Board of Voting Trustees.

It is this latter body which, according to the directors and its members, is clothed with powers of regulation more than sufficient to successfully prevent any monopoly of theatre interests being affected within Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, or in any separate territory in the country.

"No matter how much money Wall Street or any other financial force might pour into theatres," declares J. D. Williams, "the theatre equities pledged to the new company cannot pass into other hands for voting purposes for a long time to come. If money interests sought to buy every theatre represented by franchise in Associated First National Pictures, the executive disposition of any effort which threatened screen independence in any instance would remain exclusively and absolutely with the five

Paper Shortage Protection

Campaign on in Cincinnati to Prevent Newspapers Dropping Picture Advertising

THERE is a movement launched in Cincinnati by Manager Harris P. Wolfberg of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation which may be emulated in every part of the country and has attracted the attention and support of exchanges and exhibitors.

It is a propaganda movement — a constructive effort to protect moving picture publicity in the newspapers.

Right at this time the newspapers of America are laboring under the severe handicap of a shortage of paper; legislation to reduce the size of newspapers: to eliminate certain feature pages, to cut down in every way on the use of print paper may prove a real menace to the moving picture interests if the editors are not thoroughly convinced that they should not sacrifice their moving picture departments to the cry for white paper.

Manager Wolfberg, realizing this condition and knowing that he is working in a territory where moving picture publicity has not developed to the high point it has in some localities, has launched a psychological propaganda campaign to remind editors of the importance of maintaining their moving picture departments at all hazards. Exhibitors in the Cincinnati territory are urged to do their utmost, both by personal appeal to editors and by raising the standard of their publicity matter to prevent any thought entering the editor's mind that he may dispense with or even cut down the space he is giving to moving pictures.

One of the interesting steps in Mr. Wolfberg's campaign is the gathering of data on the comparative circulations of moving picture magazines. He is endeavoring to show editors that there is such an enormous interest in moving pictures that the circulation of the film publications almost equal that of the Saturday Evening Post in leading cities.

Chicago Theatre Men In On Milwaukee Deal

A big Milwaukee real estate transaction closed last week puts three Chicago moving picture men in control of the Merrill Theatre and office building, located at Grand avenue and Third street, in the Wisconsin metropolis. The trio which has taken over the theater and building includes J. Handelsman, William Hershberg and Abe Gumbiner.

Negotiations for this valuable holding has been pending several months. It came to the attention of the Chicago men through J. S. Grauman, formerly Milwaukee manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation and now occupying a similar position in the Chicago office, who held an option on the property.

The transfer affects the leasehold only, and involves a reported purchase price of $500,000. The Badger State Investment Company assumed charge of the property five years ago on a ninety-nine year lease. By this transaction the newcomers came into possession of the unexpired term of the leasehold; namely ninety-four years.

New Rochester Theatre

George E. Simpson, president of the Regorson Corp., which controls and operates the Piccadilly, Regent and Gordon theatres, Rochester, has just purchased a site in Clinton avenue South, on which he will erect a new vaudeville and motion picture house to seat 4,000 people, to be the largest in the city.

Here are two of Metro's celebrities, Richard A. Rowland, president on the ladder and Maxwell Karger, director general standing.

Theatres Asked to Promote Music Week

The motion picture interests in and around New York have been invited to help promote New York's Music Week—February 1 to 7. Special musical programs will be presented during the week, and in many of the theatres the music will be featured and will be advertised in the previous week by slides. Music Week has the endorsement of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Hammons Back—Educational Spurting

Practically Unlimited Capital Ready to Further Great Expansion Here and Abroad; Many More Exchanges Controlled

WITH the return from abroad of Earl W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational Film Corporation, the quiet which has surrounded the increasing activities of that concern since the big announcement in the early Fall that the Hudsons' Bay Company had placed its millions behind a holding company to be operated on a greatly enlarged basis, has been broken.

It is understood that Mr. Hammons' conference with the Hudsons' Bay officials in England has resulted in starting plans rolling which, with practically unlimited capital as an impetus, will carry forward until Educational, both its product and its name, will stand forth supreme in the short length subject field. It is violating no confidences to write that the Hudsons' Bay Company in its venture into the film field with Educational, is, as always in its ventures, ready to put forward practically any amount of capital, so long as the objects aimed at justify the expenditures.

New Exchanges Controlled

That the distribution system of Educational abroad, though already far reaching in its scope, would be further enlarged in order to handle more efficiently and widely the coming enlarged output of the short length pictures, has been expected for months. Though official announcement is not forthcoming, it is understood that new exchanges, probably to the number of eighteen, will in future be part and parcel of Educational, making its distribution facilities second to none on the old Continent.

And in this same connection, there is a strong belief in the trade, a belief furthered by the hum of activity in the Educational offices, that an even larger exchange expansion will shortly be effected in the United States, whereby the Educational product will enter practically new fields and cover the country.

"The primary object of my trip" said Mr. Hammons "Was of course to confer with the executives of the London office. In addition I was able to check up the results obtained by our men, who have been taking pictures all over Europe. I can say as regards this, that they have obtained some strikingly good ones too.

"Yes, our policies are greatly enlarged. Money? I can't give figures—but I am certainly not worrying. Any amount justified will be forthcoming. That's all.

We are going to follow our regular policies—but in a much bigger way. Our Providence, R. I. studio is now finished, and we will be working there shortly. Good independent product—that is, the very best product—will find a purchaser in Educational, at a price that will be attractive. We are going forward. We will maintain a strict standard, no matter how great the volume of our output. What does not come to that standard will never see the screen under the Educational trade mark.

MARCUS LOEW. Richard A. Rowland and Joseph W. Engel have left for the Pacific Coast on a trip which is the outcome of the recent purchase of Metro stock by Loew, Inc., and the merger of the business interests of the extensive theatre chain and the large producing company. Upon their return the Loew-Metro officials expect to announce big plans for expansion covering every phase of their mutual activity.

The head of the Loew circuit, the Metro president and the Metro treasurer will go direct to Los Angeles, as their primary purpose is a complete tour of inspection of the new Metro studios in Hollywood, on the outskirts of the City of the Angels. William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, is already at the studios where he has been co-operating with Maxwell Karger, Director General, for several weeks.

Mr. Loew, of course, has been particularly anxious to inspect the Metro studios, which are embraced in one of the largest and best equipped picture producing plants on the west coast. He has never seen them, and so, on the present trip will be in the hands of two experienced guides in the persons of Mr. Rowland and Mr. Engel. The Metro president has paid several visits to the Hollywood establishment since the completion of the new studios a little more than a year ago, and Mr. Engel was in Hollywood supervising the entire work when they were constructed and equipped.

The Loew enterprises and the Metro organization have both made it plain that the union of their interests is designed for the grea strength and expansion of both. C immediate outcome of the present t west by Messrs. Reading, Pa., Theatre Men Affiliate Affiliation of the theatrical interests of Carr and Shad; Wilmer and Vincent, and the Stanley Company of America, in Reading, Pa., caused a stir in amusement circles in that city last week. Four theatres, and another building are affected.

The result of the amalgamation of these interests will be a strong association of their respective theatrical enterprises which will assure to the people of Reading the continuance of the high standard of motion pictures and vaudeville which have prevailed in recent months at all of the theatres.

Efficient Cost System Installed by Rothacker

Watterson R. Rothacker wanted to take the guess work out of his film business. So H. J. Aldous, for the past five years secretary-treasurer and auditor of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co., called in H. C. Isbell, a cost accountant and systematizer, to cooperate with him in establishing and maintaining a cost system in all departments of the organization.

Under the new system it will be known exactly just what any operation in the Rothacker plant, large or small, costs. Under the old plan costs were known only in a general way. To go into costs in more detail was more than any one accounting expert could supervise and therefore Mr. Aldous secured the services of Mr. Isbell.

From now on each branch of the Rothacker business, the Industrial Department, the commercial laboratory, the studio, etc., will have its own cost account.

M. A. Chase Appointed to the Northwest

F. P.-LASKY CONVENTION PROMISES TEN MORE FEATURES OF "MIRACLE MAN" CALIBRE

ADOPTION of a plan to give an unusual intensive exploitation campaign to at least ten features which will be ready between now and the first of August, each of which the company claims will have the box office drawing power of "The Miracle Man," was a feature of the general convention of Famous Players-Lasky district and branch managers, special representatives and exploitation managers.

The convention was held in Chicago at the La Salle Hotel from January 19 to January 23. Practically every official of Famous Players was in attendance, including Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Eugene Zukor, Arthur Friend, Al Lichtman, H. D. H. Connick, John C. Flinn and many others. Branch and district managers from every section of the country were present. The primary object of the gathering was to devise means of rendering more efficient service to exhibitors of Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

The reported big increase in business also compelled the adoption of new plans to enable the sales and distribution departments to handle it more efficiently and to keep pace with the expected further expansion. These will be announced in detail at a later date.

Adolph Zukor, in his address opening the convention, sounded the keynote of the session when he said:

"We are here for business purposes, for a conference of vital importance to the organization which we represent and to ourselves.

"Our progress during the last year has been gratifying in many respects but the experience we have gained has pointed to a number of matters that require improvement and development. We must not—we cannot—stand still. We must either go ahead or fall behind—and this meeting has been called to devise means of going ahead."

members of the Board of Voting Trustees. And this body is so constituted that it is obliged, to retain its powers, to work only in the interests of exhibitor independence and for the preservation of personal right and privilege for theatre owners.

"This, then, becomes tantamount to an absolute barrier to theatre monopoly by any organization, whether its function is production, distribution, a combination of the two, or simply an investment group seeking domination of screens for reasons quite obvious but less tangible. They might buy every dollar's worth of equity in each of the five thousand and more theatres that will be affiliated with Associated First National Pictures, but the Board of Voting Trustees would be absolutely free from the dictation of new ownership for a term of years, thereby preserving an independent market for independent stars and producers. And this absolute right to legislate the broad interests of the franchise members is so construed that it remains in force for the full limit accorded by the members themselves in convention at Atlantic City last week so long as its conduct shall be in harmony with every precept of exhibitor independence and freedom from monopolistic dictation as to what an exhibitor may or may not book for the theatres he owns or controls.

"An attack by trust-seeking capital in any one territory, or in any number of territories, will avail nothing toward the goal of monopoly and domination.

"The condition which was pointed out in a recent statement that the 'American theatre is going to hell' will find its greatest and most effectual stumbling block in the method of organization conceived, sanctioned and adopted by the exhibitors themselves, and put into effect in Associated First National Pictures. Anyone is absolutely right when he says that the interests blanketed under the general term, 'Wall Street,' have been striving, strenuously, for months and months to devise some means to the end that they could control production, distribution and exhibition. Their agents in the field brought the fact home to members of First National. The danger, and the real menace, with every certainty of realizing all of the dire possibilities predicted by many, became patent to our members and their exhibitor affiliations, with the result that it grew to be a unanimous sentiment that they, as independent theatre owners, should take prompt and radical steps to protect their independence."

"They have recognized, too, the fact that their success depends entirely upon an equivalent degree of freedom and independence in production. If an independent theatre market is made permanent and enduring, as it now is, and so organized that it is far beyond the pale of monopoly for an indefinite time, there is a constant and ever-present encouragement to individual stars, directors and producers to exercise their abilities and talents as independent makers of quality productions, with the assurance that a market of the same character and operative principles awaits whatever they do that is standard in entertainment value."

Ratification by the exhibitor members of several important recommendations by the directors, will, it is said, make possible within the next three weeks, a detailed announcement of the actual organization work of the new company, and its method of functioning in relation to its present and future members, and with regard to stars, directors and producers, on a basis which is an even greater degree of departure from present systems than occurs in its plan of rentals based on established percentages for theatres in relation to the negative valuation of each production released through the distributing company.

Film - Theft Committee Effects an Arrest

Another instance of the war which the film-theft committee of the National Association of the motion picture industry is waging on film thieves was recorded last week when a man whose name is given as Louis Sapper, charged with attempted grand larceny of $225 worth of paper from the New York exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was held in $1,000 bail for the grand jury by Magistrate Schwab in Essex Market Court.

According to the reports from the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the arrest followed an alleged attempt on the part of the man in custody to bribe Gilbert Ethier of the New York exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky organization into stealing $225 worth of advertising paper from the exchange. Ethier reported the matter to J. Charles Davis, in charge of the exchange's advertising. Communications with Harold Pitman and W. C. Hawkins of the National Association's film-theft committee followed with the result that plans were laid, according to the Famous Players-Lasky report, which resulted in the arrest.

Chicago Theatres Aid in Combating Influenza

Dr. Robertson, Chicago Health Commissioner, has called upon the city's moving picture theatres to aid in the campaign against the "Flu" epidemic which is assuming serious proportions. Dr. Atkinson, business manager of the Allied Amusement Association was called into conference with the health officer Monday, and agreed on behalf of the exhibitors to run slides bearing advice and warnings in regard to prevention and treatment of the disease, material for the slides to be drawn up by the health department. The theatre owners will also take special precautions to assure good ventilation and disinfection of their houses, and will see that sneezers and coughers cover their faces or leave the theatres. It is not thought that the talk of closing the theatres to prevent the spread of the epidemic will go any further than talk, as Dr. Robertson expressed himself as satisfied with the sanitary measures being taken and also realizes the theatres' value as a publicity medium.

New York F.I.L.M. Club Notes

H. H. Buxbaum, Manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, joined at the last meeting.

The Club Members gave Mr. Buxbaum a hearty welcome upon his reentry into the Club, he being a charter member when Club was first organized in 1916, while he was Manager of General Film Co. The entrance of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation makes the membership in New York City, nearly 100 per cent. Tyrad Pictures Corporation was admitted the same evening.

The Entertainment Committee, headed by Mr. Murray Beier, has completed arrangements for the beef-steak dinner and dance to be held January 31.

Exhibitors' Trade Review Statement

"Exhibitor's Trade Review and International Cinema Trade Review changed hands on Thursday, January 15, when Louis F. Blumenthal and Charles and Henry Haring retired from the company, selling their interests to A. B. Swetland of New York City, and L. W. Boynton and Lesley Mason as his associates.

"No financial or publication interests are behind the purchase of the publications, it was emphatically stated by Mr. Swetland after the conclusion of the deal. Exhibitor's Trade Review and the international will be owned and operated solely and exclusively by the three men who constitute the company.

"A. B. Swetland becomes president of Exhibitor's Trade Review, Inc., as well as treasurer. L. W. Boynton assumes the duties of general manager, in addition to being a vice-president and assistant treasurer. Lesley Mason, who has been successively managing editor, editor and managing publisher of the magazines since their foundation, will be editor-in-chief of both publications and a vice-president.

"Mr. Swetland is one of the best known publishers in the trade magazine field."

Frank Reicher Directed "Empty Arms" Picture

Inasmuch as certain erroneous statements have been circulated, it is said, in regards to "Empty Arms," the initial Lester Park-Edward Whiteside production, starring Gail Kane, who is supported by Thurston Hall and J. Herbert Frank, Mr. Park has issued an official statement.

The statement reads:

"A director formerly in my employ, for reasons which I cannot fathom, has repeatedly boasted that he was responsible for the direction of our picture, "Empty Arms," starring Gail Kane and written by Willard King Bradley.

"The truth of the matter is, this director was working in Los Angeles while Frank Reicher was staging 'Empty Arms' at the Thanhouser Studios in New Rochelle. This statement is issued in fairness to Mr. Reicher, who has been in complete charge of 'Empty Arms' from the main title to the final fadeout."

Press Book Is Ready for "The Hawk's Trail"

The publicity department of Burston Films, Inc., Longacre Bldg., announce an "Exhibitors' Book" just off the press and "on time" for "The Hawk's Trail." The book includes sixteen pages of advertising and press matter with a separate press sheet inserted which carries newspaper stories and cuts for the exhibitor's local use.

The cover plays up the star of the advertised feature, revealing the familiar features of King Baggot against a crescent moon background, together with the legend "A Face As Well Known as the Man in the Moon." Portraits of the featured Grace Darmond and Rhea Mitchell also grace the cover while the title has for a background the broad sweep of a hawk's feather.

Stanley Twist

Stanley Twist to Launch New Enterprise

It was announced this week that Stanley H. Twist, who for the past three years has been acting as a personal assistant to Mr. W. R. Rothacker, President of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company, is arranging to sever his active connection with that company in the near future in order to carry out certain personal plans which Mr. Twist and his chief have been discussing for some time past.

With the assistance and co-operation of Mr. Rothacker, Mr. Twist is planning to launch his new enterprise within the next few months. Details of his new plans will be announced at a later date.

Mr. Twist is well and favorably known in motion picture and advertising circles, and his many friends will be pleased to learn that while severing his active connection with the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company, he will still be indirectly identified with the rapidly expanding Rothacker interests.

Mr. Twist, though still a young man, has enjoyed an exceptionally broad and successful experience in the motion picture field. Entering the business in 1908 he became identified with Col. W. N. Selig, with whom he was connected for the next five years.

Upon resigning from the Selig organization, Mr. Twist specialized for a number of years in the making and marketing of feature subjects. During this period he was identified at different times with the largest organizations in the industry.

About three years ago Mr. Twist entered the organization of his friend, Watterson R. Rothacker.

New Trade Journal for Chicago Exhibitors

The Allied Amusements Bulletin, the official organ of the Allied Amusement Association, made its debut to the motion-picture trade in Chicago, on Saturday, January 17th. The new publication, of which Dr. Sam Atkinson is the managing editor, will be issued every two-weeks. The Allied Amusement Association, whose interests the periodical is to represent, is an organization made up of leading exhibitors and theatre-goers. The business of the organization has become so extensive that it was thought advisable to establish a press medium.

Tamar Lane Goes to Character Pictures

Tamar Lane for the past year associated with the Selznick Company has joined the Character Pictures Corporation—in capacity of Manager of Productions—according to an announcement from the offices of the company.

Outlining the production plans of the Character company, Mr. Lane said. "Of course we believe in the few and better productions idea but we also hope to give more individuality and character to our productions than is usually seen upon the screen. We will also endeavor to cut production costs down to a more reasonable amount than is now a practice with most companies. It is our opinion that the average productions cost them too high and that the exhibitor is often paying for much that is neither necessary or beneficial.

Co-incidental with the announcement of Mr. Lane's joining the Character Pictures Corporation comes news that in spite of the present trend of producers eastward, the company will shortly take over a studio in California after making two productions in New York. The officers of the company believing that the west coast is both a better and more economical place to make pictures than the east.

Buys "Nothing a Year" to Star Olive Tell

The Jans Pictures, Inc., announces that B. A. Rolfe has selected "Nothing a Year" as a stellar vehicle for Olive Tell. The title for this feature will, it is understood, be changed, the announcement of which will be made at a later date.

"Nothing A Year" is a novel by Charles Belmont Davis who has ranked as one of the best authors of modern day fiction. He is a brother of the late Richard Harding Davis and has for years been editor of Collier's Weekly

Mr. Davis's novel, it is said, deals with life in New York Society. The plot is reported to be unique, and it is stated that the character of the leading woman, as portrayed by Miss Tell is unusual and something quite out of the ordinary, as found in the present day film dramas.

Short Features That Touch on Many Angles of Film News

Here's a Brickbat for the News

Mr. W. A. Johnston, Editor,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I AM going to start this letter with the frank statement that I am very much surprised at the stand you have taken against the interests of the exhibitors of the country within the past three months. Not long ago you solemnly declared in one of your editorials that "Percentage Is Coming," evidently with the idea of spreading the introductory propaganda so that the poor "boobs" of exhibitors would be prepared for, and their minds in a receptive state for a bigger "gyp" when the producers are ready to spring it. It is all very well for you to sit at your mahogany desk in New York City and theorize learnedly about the problems of the average exhibitor, but let me give you a practical, concrete example of how this "percentage" plan is handled when it is submitted to the manager of a theatre. Not long ago I asked one of the prominent exchanges for prices on a certain subject which is the product of a celebrated director. The exchange manager answered that he had just returned from a visit to the home office in New York and that a new policy had been evolved by the producing company which was to be a wonderful boon to the downtrodden exhibitor, to wit: "Percentage booking." In accordance with this plan he offered to book the picture to me as follows: A flat rental was named which was five dollars less than he afterward booked the picture to me on a straight rental basis. In addition to this he kindly offered to allow me to deduct my overhead expenses, and then the exchange was to share the remainder with me 50-50. After I ran the picture I indulged in a little figuring and found that if I had played the picture on a percentage basis I would have lost money, while the exchange would have made approximately 100% more than they received from the rental basis. If this new plan becomes effective, a marvelous era of prosperity is opening for the exhibitor—NOT.

Your recent statement that the producer gets but ten per cent of the exhibitor's gross in rentals is the best piece of fictional humor I have read since Ring Lardner wrote his first "Al" story, and doubtless many exchange managers have laughed themselves to death when they read it. I give from 30% to 75% of my gross for film rentals, and judging by statements made by other managers of my acquaintance, this estimate is about correct. Mr. Johnston, I believe in your sense of fairness and your sincerity, but for Heaven's sake stop accepting "statistics" prepared by some press agent for the Art-In-Graft film company, and get out and obtain the real facts from the fellows on the firing line, who will be glad to "talk cold turkey" with you and produce letters from the exchanges to prove the above facts.

I am one of the despised "Eighty Per Centers," who are often patronizingly referred to as the "backbone of the industry," but I would call them the "wishbone" of the

Laemmle Answers Gest's Wail About Films

ASSERTING that the American theatre is rapidly going to the demnition bow-wows, and that moving pictures are the cause for this descent to Plutonian shores, Morris Gest, of the theatrical firm of Comstock & Gest, gave an interview in Chicago to the correspondent of the New York Times, severely criticising financiers for investing in moving pictures.

In discussing the asseverations of Mr. Gest on this subject, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company said: "Mr. Gest pays the moving picture industry the finest possible compliment when he says that Wall Street is investing in theatres throughout the country and turning them into moving picture houses. Whatever else may be said about Wall Street, it must be said that the men who constitute the financial power of America are men recognized for astuteness and business sagacity, therefore, if as Mr. Gest states, these men are investing in theatres for moving picture purposes, it is a self-evident fact that they recognize that the great bulk of the American public wants moving picture entertainment.

"Mr. Gest goes on to cite the formulas by which the spoken stage is being throttled, but he does not mention the fact that the present season has been one of the most prosperous in the history of theatricals, a fact which every regular attendant at the theatre will attest. As I see it, the moving picture instead of harming the theatrical business, acts as a stimulus by creating a desire, not only for moving pictures, but for other forms of entertainment as well.

"The trouble with a few theatrical producers is that they fail to realize the tremendous influence for good which is wielded by moving pictures, and cling to the old alibi—as Mr. Gest does in his interview—that there is no art in moving pictures. Mr. Gest asserts that 'artistry and filthy money are not, and never will be good bed-fellows.'

"Artistry, bosh! Under the guise of art, Mr. Gest recently presented in New York, a production which shocked even blase New York theatre-goers, and under the instructions of city officials was subjected to the pruning knife, before they would suffer its further presentation. Mr. Gest will have difficulty in mentioning any moving picture of recent production that ran so close to the edge as his production referred to.

"Even the most rabid defamer of moving pictures must admit that from an artistic standpoint, moving pictures have made great strides in the past several months. I need only point to such productions as "Broken Blossoms," "Blind Husbands," and "The Miracle Man," to prove this contention. And we are just starting. I confidently believe that 1920 will bring forth many moving pictures of such beauty and artistry, that even producers will be surprised at their excellence. Far from being a mere commercial proposition, moving pictures are artistic production, which rival in beauty the most elaborate past of contemporary stage plays."

Advertising As Seen By A Newspaper Man

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Gentlemen:

IN your discussion of motion picture advertising you have touched the point which is going to place motion picture entertainment upon a scale of recognized dignity in every city where producers support their home productions in this way. So many producers seem hypnotized by beautiful pictures on highly calendared paper that they ignore direct appeal to the people from whom they must reap their profits, the individual patron of the local picture house. I have often thought that a good many producers of this type advertise to themselves rather than to their prospects.

I have been writing to a good many producers right along this line, who seem to be content to spend all of their money in magazines. To my mind, the psychological time to advertise to prospective patrons of a picture film is at the time when that particular film can be seen on show at a particular house in their home city upon a particular date. Then the copy which will create desire to see that picture can immediately produce results and need not compete with one hundred and one competitive desires or conflicts which arise between the time somebody reads of a picture in a magazine and the time somebody tells them it can be seen in their favorite playhouse—too many things intervene. In the meantime too often the patron has forgotten the name, even, of the picture by which he hoped to remember its identity. You make another point which is a very pertinent one, which also I have called to the attention of prolific and I presume highly paid press agents. A free horse can be easily ridden to death.

The billboard seems to be one which is quite often, I take it, forced on the local exhibitor. Sheets are printed and have to be gotten rid of. Sometimes they hit the date of the local production and sometimes they don't. I have seen sheets in this town after the production appeared emblazoned with the herald "tonight." My idea about such billboard advertising is that the theatres were better off without it, for the cloud of uncertainty which such an announcement throws upon every other such announcement would almost defeat the effect desired on everything announced thereafter.

I believe the producing companies are going to recognize the effectiveness of newspaper advertising for direct sales just as manufacturers are more and more. The more they do the more substantial structure they raise for themselves. They are then building the motion picture industry from the ground up.

Sincerely yours,
American and News.

CANADA

The Rialto theatre, Toronto, Ontario, has passed away. This theatre has been torn down to make way for a large store structure and with its passing is seen the finish of one of the oldest of the small downtown houses.

Paramount theatres, Limited, Toronto, the large Canadian moving picture theatre enterprise which is affiliated with Regal Films, Limited, Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited, and Alex. Pantages, has decided to erect a large theatre in Oshawa, Ontario. The Paramount Company has arranged to build a theatre to seat 1,500 people and to cost approximately $200,000.

John T. Fiddes, formerly manager of the Holman theatre, Montreal, has undertaken to present Sunday concerts at the Gayety theatre, Montreal, which is the only burlesque house in the city. He has leased the Gayety for Sundays only and has arranged to give combination programmes in the afternoon and at night at popular prices.

The head office of the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange Company at Toronto, Ontario, has been moved from 143 Yonge Street to 39 Queen Street West. The club quarters of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario are located at the former address.

A new organization for the moving picture business in Canada sprang into existence at Toronto, Ontario, on January 9, when the Canadian Moving Picture Distributors' Association was formed. Announcement is made that the new association will deal with matters of general importance to the trade, particularly legislative subjects.

The first president of the new association is Clair Hague, Toronto, who is president and general manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company. The vice-president is W. F. Barrett, Toronto. The secretary-treasurer is J. P. O'Loughlin, of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto.

The serial picture has been the object of special and unusual attention in the Provinces of Ontario and Nova Scotia. In Ontario, the Government has adopted a regulation which requires moving picture exchanges to have all episodes of a serial before it can be offered for examination by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors.

At Sydney, Nova Scotia, the Local Council of Women has asked the Nova Scotia censors to prohibit the showing of serials on Friday and Saturdays because, it is pointed out, many children attend the theatres on the two days mentioned. The object of this queer request is to restrict the showing of the serials to adults as much as possible. The thrilling stuff in the serials is not considered proper for children's minds. No immediate action was taken by the Nova Scotia censor board.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, moving picture men are wondering why there is so much discussion about the concave moving picture screen which was recently "discovered" by a Frenchman. A screen of this type has been used in the Province theatre, Winnipeg, for a number of years, according to Manager Jernberg.

The Manitoba Exhibitors' Association has secured a suite of five rooms in the McGreevy Block, Portage Avenue, Winnipeg, for a club and the premises have been fitted with expensive and appropriate furniture. Luncheons will be served at regular intervals in the club.

Colored citizens of Montreal, Quebec, held a mass meeting a few nights ago for the purpose of arranging to carry the case of Reynolds vs. Loew's theatre to a higher court. This case has attracted considerable attention because of the big point at issue. Sol Reynolds, a negro, was refused a seat on the orchestra floor of the theatre, it is declared, and he was turned out of the theatre, it is stated. He entered suit against the theatre and was awarded damages in the lower court. The theatre appealed the case with the result that the decision was reversed, the effect of the ruling being that theatre managers could draw the color line if desired.

Ben Soskin, Vancouver manager of the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, Toronto, resigned recently in order to join the Sterling Films, Limited, an independent exchange company with offices in Toronto and Montreal. Wiley Pettis is slated as the successor to Ben Soskin in the Vancouver office.

Robert Lucas, of Chicago, comes to take charge of United Artists, succeeding Robert Churchill, who resigned to enter the states right field. Fred Young has succeeded W. A. Hayes as Hallmark manager.

For the production of "In Old Kentucky," which will run two weeks at the Madison, Manager John H. Kunsky has o.k.'d plans of Howard Pierce, publicity and production manager, for the staging of a horse race scene with treadmill and other effects, secured from the New York Hippodrome, it is stated.

Norma Talmadge and her sister Constance fought it out at the Madison and Adams theatres this week, one with "A Daughter of Two Worlds" and the other with "Two Weeks." The honors were declared even, as both houses broke their Sunday records, according to reports.

"Everywoman" has started off on its second week at the Broadway Strand. The attendance is said to have broken all previous records, including "The Miracle Man" and "Male and Female," and on Sunday, the record for "The Unpardonable Sin," the picture that had played to more money on one day than any other film in Detroit, was excelled by just $24, it is stated.

Herb Weil, of Port Huron, W. A. Hayes and Robert Churchill, who formed the Commonwealth Pictures Corp., report that they have purchased state rights for Equity pictures. John H. Kunsky held the franchise.

T. H. Ealand, at the Majestic, part of the Miles circuit but showing first run pictures with vaudeville, has booked "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" and will start it off with a big advertising campaign.

The William Fox Washington has raised its night prices to 30 and 50 cents and matinee seats to 20 and 30 cents. The prices were 15 and 25 cents in the afternoon and 30 and 40 cents at night.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Moving Picture Operators of Providence, R. I., have held a banquet welcoming home thirteen of the fourteen members who went into service during the war. A special cable was run to the building where the affair was held that power might be furnished for the pictures that were shown.

Sullivan, William G. Evans, Lincoln S. Sheldon, Albert R. Cobb, William A. Heywood, Charles D. Macomber, Thomas E. Shannon, Eugene A. Arnold and Charles H. Fuller, Jr.

Practically the same forces who opposed the Sunday baseball bill last year are lining up to defeat, if possible, the bills pending before the General Assembly, to permit motion picture exhibitions on Sundays. It is understood that the majority leaders are disposed to favor the passage of one or the other of the motion picture bills, although opposition of no small power is expected to develop.

Senator Saugy, who introduced one bill, believes his bill will meet with the favor of the Assembly. There was considerable opposition when the Sunday concert law was passed and still greater force was opposed to the passage of the Sunday baseball bill. Both are quite generally believed to have had beneficial results.

ST. LOUIS

A trade showing of "The Eyes of Youth" was held at the Fox Liberty theatre. Earl Lawson controls the state rights for the production. The Fox Liberty orchestra furnished the music for the showing.

June Caprice is expected to appear personally at the Loew's Garrick theatre January 18th, 19th, 20th and 21st.

Harry Koplar and "Bill" Sievers left for Atlantic City to attend the First National convention. They have the "Mississippi Marbles" with them.

S. S. Fox, representing the Merit Film company of Denver, is in town handling "The Hushed Hour," for this territory.

AN ALL-THE-WAY APPRECIATION

THE producer, star, cameraman and the Rothacker Laboratories which turned out the print, all come in for their measure of praise in the following whole hearted letter:

First National Exhibitors' Cir.,
Atlanta, Ga.

Gentlemen:

It's a one hundred per cent picture all the way—and by all the way we mean right on thru the laboratories. The picture to which we refer is "A Daughter of Two Worlds" featuring Norma Talmadge.

The production is the kind that makes a fellow feel like thirty cents when he realizes what physically imperfect pictures he has been screening. Allow us to congratulate you on the finished product as delivered to us.

There is such a marked improvement in developing and printing that even our laymen patrons commented on it most favorably.

When laboratories turn out prints like this, one of the most important essentials in picture making has been accomplished.

100% is perfect and that is exactly what the developing and printing in "A Daughter of Two Worlds" is. Keep the good work up and you are bound to be rewarded.

Yours very truly,
Mudd & Colley Am. Co., Inc.,
Birmingham, Ala.

industry and it is usually "pulled" by the exchange on one prong and the producer on the other. On this wishbone is "wished" the junk film, the "gyp" rentals and the lying, bull throwing film peddler, who is careful not to make the same territory twice, but in spite of all this the "Eighty Per Center" will continue to hold his own and make a living for his family if he does not have to submit to some scheme like percentage bookings which will reduce him to a position of janitor and bill poster for the exchanges, and watered stock producing companies. I do not expect this letter to be published. It is intended as a little heart to heart talk only.

Yours truly,
E. E. SPRAGUE.

The Lyric,
Goodland, Kansas.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Of course we are glad to publish Mr. Sprague's letter, as we are any honest difference of opinion. We believe that William A. Johnston's editorial on Page 1225 of this issue states the position of The News on Percentage. As for the ten per cent figures—we were right, and we are right. It is up to Mr. Sprague and the rest of the "Eighty Per Centers" to find where the leakage is.

"Ninety-Nine Percent of the Public Seek Good Amusement"

FOR short epigrammatic sentences this article, one of our series by the photoplay and amusement editors of leading newspapers throughout the country on the motion picture page as a department, is a model. Julien Elfenbein, the author, has applied his Scripps training in writing this story. He hammers home statements, wasting no words and resorting to no superfluities. He tells you what he and the Houston Press have learned about the "movie section." He tells you why the Press has a motion picture section. The reason is fully summed up in the second paragraph of his article, a sentence of just thirteen words. "Fully 99 per cent of the people seek good amusement." Read Mr. Elfenbein's article. It contains more facts than a dictionary.

By JULIEN ELFENBEIN

Amusement Editor of the Houston Press

AMUSEMENT is relaxation. Ergo, amusement promotes progress and development.

Fully 99 per cent. of the people seek good amusement. Ergo, information about amusements is news to that 99 per cent.

What is news to 99 per cent. of the people cannot be ignored. That's why The Houston Press conducts an amusement department.

But all amusement information is not news prima facie.

That's because there are not enough real newspapermen writing amusement news.

There's a difference between a press agent and a news writer; the same difference exists between "publicity" and "news."

The press agent class are but crude promotors after all.

The news writer is a diplomat.

News stories an inch in size may contain more effectiveness from a "selling" standpoint than an entire page of display advertisement.

An amusement advertising contract with the press contains no stipulation for any "publicity" on the side.

The exhibitor or playhouse manager buys advertising space—no more.

No one is rich enough to buy an inch of news column.

But it is possible for the smallest advertiser to look at this paper some afternoon and find a news story about his show or his star or his house on page one.

It isn't there for any other reason than that it is news.

Why does the exhibitor prefer this little news story (when he can get it) to the daily free space for "publicity" which other papers offer?

Because it is amusement news stories that "sell" pictures to the public.

And it is amusement news stories that "sell" the newspaper's advertising space to the exhibitor.

To resort to the vernacular, do you get me?

To illustrade, say that a story comes over the wire that Billie Burke has divorced her husband, or that Nazimova was decorated for war work.

Knowing that Billie is due to appear at the Queen theatre next week in "Wanted, A Husband," how easy, how subtle, how dsplomatic and how effective to play up that story as a NEWS STORY and then attach this ad": "Miss Burke appears next week at the Queen in 'Wanted, A Husband.'"

And if Nazimova happens to be at the Liberty theatre in "Stronger Than Death," it is certainly the height of journalism to be able to give your news story a "local angle" by writing a "lead" like this: "Alla Nazimova, who is portraying her greatest emotional role at the Liberty in 'Stronger Than Death,' was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal Monday for her valiant war services abroad," etc., etc.

The Houston Press is a Scripps paper.

There are two cardinal virtues about a Scripps paper.

One is the brisk, brief, honest, simple, fearless editorial style.

Another is the absolute independence of editorial and advertising department.

What does this mean?

First, that stereotyped, hackneyed press agent rot can't wedge its way into a single column.

It means that all stories must be breezy news stories that all folks can read and enjoy.

It means that reviews and criticisms will be straightforward and honest.

But greater than that, it means a boost for the amusement world, because you have a newspaper placing the stories about plays and pictures, about actor folk and managers, about producers and exhibitors, on a par with the stories, about senators and merchant princes, diplomats and industrial magnates, educators and jurists.

In short, the same value is placed upon "amusement row" as a "news source" that is placed upon courts, police, or politics.

And at that, the editorial mind is simply hitting on all cylinders, because—

People demand amusement. Ergo, amusement information is NEWS.

The press agent, who uses camouflage and hokum in the well-known ballyhoo style to tell what he has for sale is simply another view of the poor cub who is trying to write a news story or "faking" because he has no story. Fortunately, the "some of the people you can fool all the time" about whom Lincoln coined a famous epigram, are daily diminishing in number.

The rival papers of this city run columns of daily amusement "publicity" boosting every show —good, bad and mediocre shows alike—all set in six-point type, making the amusement page, so-called, about as attractive as a dictionary would be without its drawings.

In these papers the amusement advertising is always banked up underneath the "publicity" stories, removing the last doubt from a reader's mind that the "dope" at the top of the page is simply the advertisement done in more profuse verbiage.

Consider the poor movie fan!

He can see but one or two pictures at the most in an evening.

The prices are pretty high.

His time he considers valuable and limited.

Advertisements boost all pictures.

Large ads do not always spell better pictures.

Where shall he go tonight to get his money's worth?

Enter the Houston Press amusement department.

All amusement stories, newsy, short, snappy, alive, plain, honest.

They are not put in the advertisement section to give false impressions.

They are not written by press agents or signed by "Adv."

They will tell the fan what he may expect or what he's going to see.

He'll find the Press gives him a pretty good tip always.

He'll find, moreover, that the Press can help him to appreciate good pictures.

He'll find feature stories about stars, about directors, about producers, about authors, about scenario writers, about the studios, about the entire human interest side of the cinema world in the Press.

For we glean our news from the wires, from the movie magazines, from news letters, from trade journals, and from the dramatic sections of New York newspapers.

Signed reviews of all movies and playhouse bills are a Monday feature.

The movie "morgue" contains more than 700 mats and cuts of movie and stage stars.

The California division of the Newspaper Enterprise Association, of which the Press is a member, furnishes weekly exclusive feature service on movie stars.

There are three broad-minded men who are responsible for the ease with which we have "sold" the amusement department to readers and advertisers.

One is the editor, Mr. G. V. Sanders. Another is the foreman of the composing room, Mr. L. F. Bookman. The third is Mr. Charles Bushey, the man who gets the amusement ads.

The Editor "lays off" of the amusement department entirely.

The composing room boss employs the artistry of fifteen years' experience as a make-up man to create an attractive movie page from a mechanical standpoint.

The ad solicitor educates exhibitors to the Scripps philosophy of the news story, and soothes those who grumble and criticise.

The Houston Press amusement department, which is mostly "movie news," pays in terms of increased advertising space, increased circulation, especially home circulation, and adds to the prestige and "good will" of the paper.

Science has said that amusement promotes progress and development. Ergo, the Press, in giving equal recognition to the "fifth industry" from a news standpoint, is performing a full service.

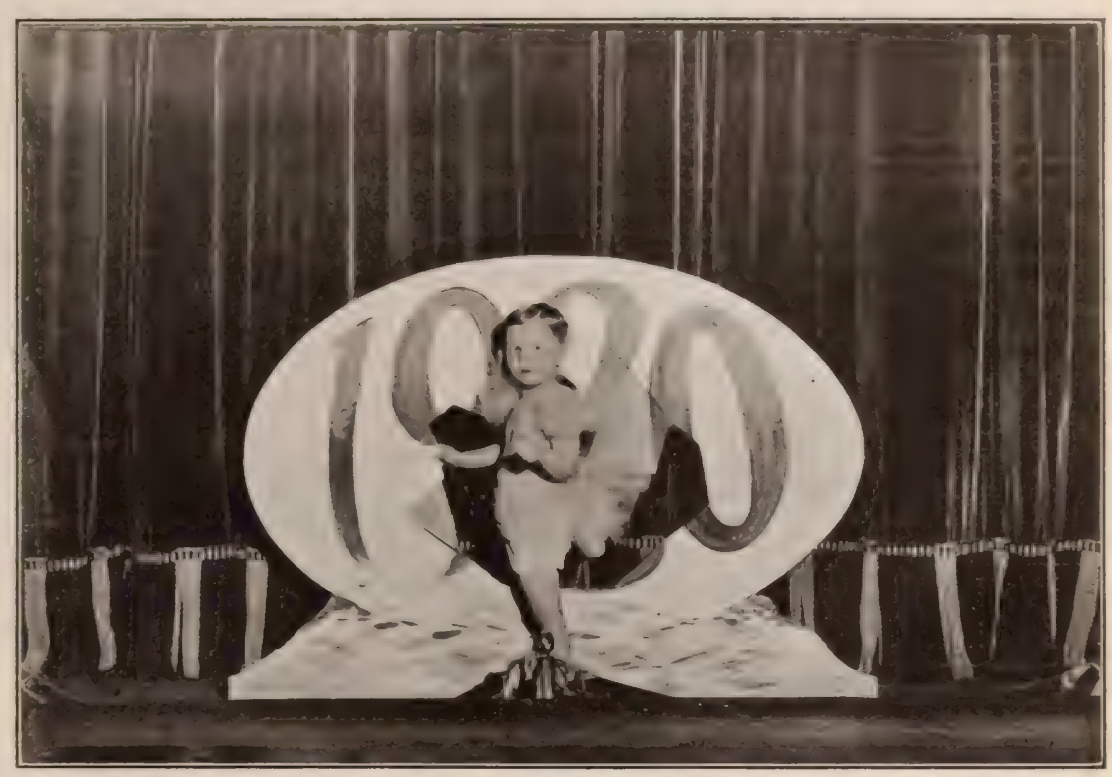
Amusement Editor, The Houston Press.

The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week

Arthur G. Stolte, Manager of the Des Moines Theatre, Stages Midnight Show with Novel Prologue Number

THE stories of midnight shows to usher in 1920 are coming from many sources. In most of them is contained the statement that it was the first old-new year event to be staged. Also every account states that the idea went over, as Arthur G. Stolte manager of the Des Moines theatre, Des Moines, Iowa, about whose New Year show this is mainly concerned, says "with a bang."



Arthur G. Stolte's "1920" youngster, who played like a veteran in the Des Moines theatre prologue number which was a feature of the midnight show

Mr. Stolte did more than just run a New Year, midnight show. He staged a special performance, the feature of which was a prologue number which symbolized the passing of 1919 and the birth of 1920.

The Des Moines show began at prompt eleven o'clock to a house which filled the 2500 seats of which the theatre boasts and overflowed into the aisles. His first number was a good quartet which sang the good old songs. He followed this with Mack Sennett's "Speakeasy" a most appropriate production for a "New Year's part" since the "flowing bowl" has been a symbol of the old year's festivities up until this Dec. 31st, and was this time where, the revellers were fortunate enough to have possessed some "firewater."

Two musical numbers went on after the film showing and then came Mr. Stolte's big event, a special prologue designed by him for the occasion.

Without warning the house lights were switched off just prior to the birth of the New Year and the orchestra began playing "spooky" music. A spot light glowed suddenly and focussed at a point on the stage. As the spot was extended it disclosed the shape of a huge egg lying on the stage in front of the curtain. The orchestra drums rumbled heavily and during this pieces from the shell of the "egg" were seen to fall as if a "chick" was pecking it's way into the world. Soon a child's arm appeared from within the shell and then one foot. After a proper dramatic pause the little boy you will note in the accompanying illustrations stepped out of the egg and winked at the audience He then ran over to a large round painting representing the world showing North and South America and knocked for admittance. Receiving no notice, he pretended anger and stamped his feet. After a moment's reflection as if thinking how to force his way into the world, he walked down stage and winked again at the audience. He then returned to the "world." Standing in front of the painting he doubled up his "chubby" fists and figuretively speaking "smashes his way into the world" the painting being of paper. After tearing a hole large enough in the paper, he steps through. By this time the stage was aglow with "stage fire" and other illuminating effects and the bells were ringing out the birth of the new year.

Another view of Arthur Stolte's stage setting used in the midnight show prologue number

As soon as the last portion of the tableaux had been enacted the fun for which a large number of the crowd had come, started.

Bags of confetti were emptied, hundreds of balloons were let loose, ribbon throws were produced and noise makers of all kinds made their appearance. Mr. Stolte had made arrangements to move the orchestra to the rear of the theatre as soon as their work was finished and soon a dance was in progress.

The handsome little chap who enacted the role of "1920" did his part with all the seriousness and skill of a veteran actor. While he was "breaking into the world" not a sound was heard in the entire audience. The stunt has caused more talk than any theatrical event ever staged in Des Moines and made more solid Mr. Stolte's opinion that it is the unusual in exploitation which breaks box office records. It is not so long since that the Des Moines with some misgivings attempted a prologue as a part of the theatre's program. One trial and Mr. Stolte was ready for one every time he could think up or borrow a good idea.

Alibi Themselves in Raising Admissions

C. W. MASON, manager, and A. F. Brentlinger, director-general of the Orpheum theatre at Fort Wayne, Ind., believe that the more the patrons are taken into the confidence of the theatre owners the better it is for all concerned. Recently they abolished the plan of program bookings for the Orpheum and decided upon a policy of nothing but feature pictures, and to accomplish this an increase in admission prices was necessary to meet the increased service cost. The announcement they published in connection with a full page advertisement of Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum," which was the production chosen to inaugurate the new policy, read as follows:

"The Orpheum announces:

"That it has joined the forward marching ranks of the motion picture industry for 'Bigger and Better Pictures.'

"Unlike former years, no program pictures have been booked. All bookings this season have been made on the independent booking plan, which means that we buy our pictures for their worth alone, and we have secured them only at enormous rental prices.

"This is why the cost is higher.

"The public is absolute in demanding better pictures. It no longer drifts into a motion picture house. The public shops for its pictures.

"Story competition has brought prices to the same peak that star competition elevated salaries.

"Producers are spending more money on their productions and in addition are adding the cost of national advertising campaign to their budgets.

"We must therefore pay rentals tripled over those of last year, but in turn we have been able, due to the fact that we are one of a chain of four theatres, to secure for the shopping public pictures booked for quality alone, selected independently and for their individual merit only."

At the same time the Orpheum stopped the policy of running the matinee shows at a lesser price than the evening performances and Mr. Mason reports that the new policy has brought greater results than they had ever deemed possible at the time it was voted to adopt it.

Plays Four Features from One Producer in Succession with Succes

LOCATED in the exclusive Mount Pleasar section of Washington, D. C., and catering t a high class clientele, it is natural that everythin in connection with H. M. Crandall's Knickerbocke theatre should be conservative, artistic and in goo taste. The Mount Pleasant is an open bookin theatre with a reputation for showing the fine productions on the market. For the holiday wee between Christmas and New Year's, four Goldwy Pictures were chosen for two-day bookings-Geraldine Farrar in "Flame of The Desert," Re Beach's "The Girl From Outside," Will Rogers i "Almost a Husband" and Louis Bennison i "High Pockets."

The lobby display in connection with the presentation of these pictures, as shown in the accompanying cut, is decidedly attractive in a simple an dignified way, and just the thing for a house o the character of the Mount Pleasant. Where mor aggressive announcements might offend the conservative clientele catered to by Manager Crandal the unpretentious and artistic arrangement make an inviting entrance to the theatre.

Contest is Gratifying Business Builder for Exhibitor and Newspaper

THE multiple advantages which accrue when theatre manager and newspaper editors get together and work hand in hand is to be found in a recital of what happened when Ed Greenblatt, manager of the Isis Theatre of Houston, Texas, and Julien Elfenbein, amusement editor of the Houston Press, decided there was mutual benefit in running a "resemblance contest" in the Press in connection with the showing of Constance Binney in "Erstwhile Susan."

The Press contest was begun on Dec. 10, and ran for four days. "Erstwhile Susan" was booked at the Isis for Dec. 19.

It was a remarkable contest because the star whose photograph was run for four days, was unknown to the Houston public either by face or reputation, the scheduled Binney picture being the first screen starring appearance of the Broadway debutante of "39 East."

It was more remarkable so far as the newspapers was concerned because two solid pages of extra advertising were secured, and from the theatre man's standpoint because, with an unknown star, a business was done that was worthy of a Mary Pickford.

It was most remarkable because the winner's photograph so nearly matched the portrait of Miss Constance Binney, even to the arrangement of pose and coiffure, that the editors of the Press hesitated to run it for fear readers would think Miss Binney's photograph had simply been duplicated.

The winner was Mrs. Ruby Turner, whose remarkable likeness to Miss Binney is shown in the accompanying illustration.

To top it all the judges of the contest selected as "second best" a girl who later proved to be the youngest sister of the winner, Miss Evelyn Goodell.

The Constance Binney-Erstwhile Susan contest was handled on "Page One."

Readers of the Press, as well as advertisers, know that a million dollars couldn't buy advertising space on "Page One."

Ergo, the Constance Binney contest was a news contest.

It was started for one purpose, from the standpoint of the editorial staff, viz., to find a Houston girl who most closely resembled a certain motion picture star and to give that lucky girl a gold wrist watch as a Christmas present.

The Press motion picture advertising man, Charles Bushey, and Mr. Greenblatt, manager of the Isis theatre, bought the gold Gruen wrist watc from one of Houston's fashionable jewelers.

Winner of the Constance Binney resemblance contest, Mrs. Ruby Turner

The jeweler's firm name was mentioned in return for selling the watch at cost price and th "Constance Binney Watch" went on exhibit i their windows. Traffic near the windows becam obstructed by girls and women before the fou days were over, too.

One photograph of Miss Binney was selecte and published as that "upon which the decisio would be based."

Two photographers agreed to take photograph in "Constance Binney Poses" of any candidate for the "Constance Binney Watch" who secure a card entitling her to a free sitting from th Amusement Editor of the Press. These photographers received mention for this courtesy, not t speak of Christmas orders from all candidates an their friends.

The rules were simple.

A girl could send a photograph or present herself at the Press office for a card.

The style of coiffure displayed in Miss Binney' pose was to be disregarded by the judges so tha candidates sending in pictures taken before th contest would not be barred by difference of hai dress.

Married women as well as single girls wer eligible.

Perfect likeness was not sought—simply the likeness of the girl who resembled Miss Constanc Binney more closely than any other Houston gir was desired.

More than forty pictures came in before the contest closed on the 15th.

December 16 the winner was announced, and he picture and that of Miss Binney, together wit second and third choice, were published.

Pages two and three of the December 17 Pres carried a double-page display announcing that o the morrow Houston's "Erstwhile Susan" gi would visit various business establishments of th city garbed in a Constance Binney set of furs, Constance Binney hat, Constance Binney gow etc., furnished by a Houston fashionable clothie

The display also announced that Houston' "Erstwhile Susan" would be piloted about in $6,000 "MacFarland Six," 1920 car.

Each establishment stated in its advertiseme the hour during which Houston's "Erstwhil Susan" would appear and announced that anyo "discovering" her would be presented with passe to the Isis theatre to see the real "Erstwhil Susan."

Thursday, December 18, as per schedule, Houston's "Erstwhile Susan," hundreds of would-b

The Prize Exploitation Idea of Many Moons

Read What Manager Ballantyne of the Moon Theater, Omaha, Originated for His "Clouds" Engagement

THE prize exploitation idea for many moons comes from the Moon Theatre, Omaha, Neb., and there is little fear of contradiction that it will be excelled because of its inexpensiveness and attractiveness for many moons to come.

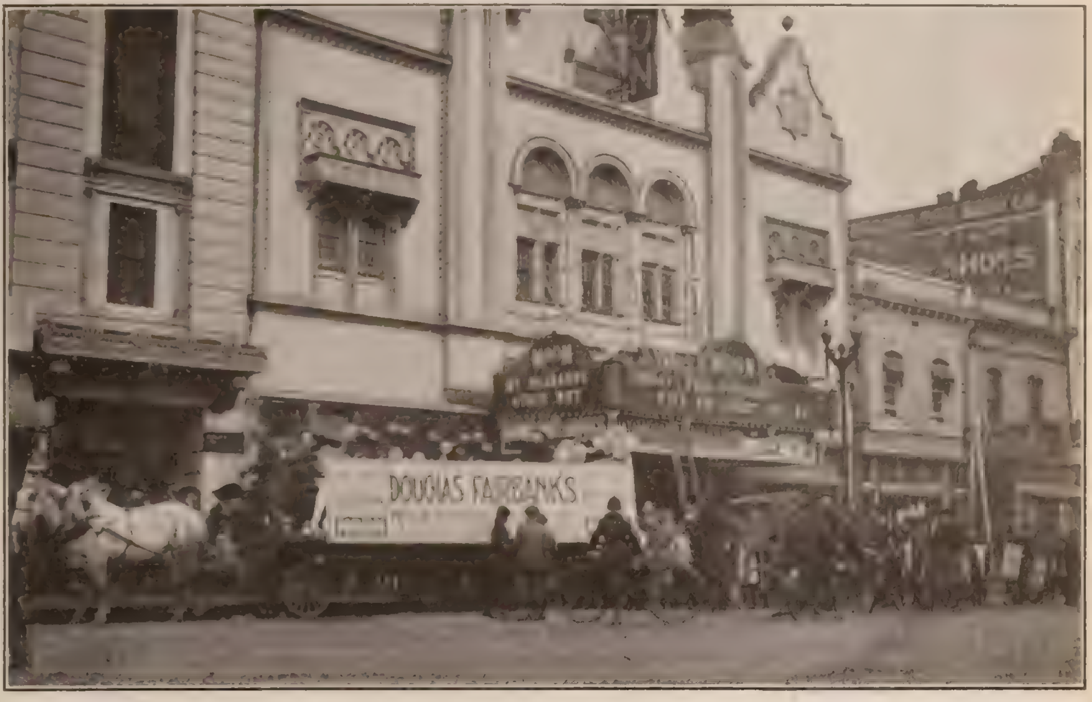
Simplicity always wins the prize. It never happens that the terribly intricate things that are put into vogue in exploitation are the most attractive, and surely they are never the most inexpensive. It is the simple ideas, put into work, which have a distinctiveness that attracts the attention of one's townsfolk in what always must be classed as the best.

This excellent idea is a jumping-jack of "Doug" arranged for the Moon Theatre, of Omaha, Neb., and which was originated by Manager Ballantyne, of that theatre.

We could go into many paragraphs of superlatives regarding this bit of exploitation, but the photographs accompanying this story are almost sufficient in themselves to prove identically what words of praise we could offer in behalf of this idea.

Manager Ballantyne simply took a photograph of "Doug" and had his artist paint a life size picture of it in such a way that the reverse side could be used also. This was jacked apart, and then "bobbed" together just the same as the jumping-jacks the youngsters in every household have and find so much pleasure with. The "jack" was mounted on an eighty-foot rope and the inimitable dummy of the acrobatic-star climbed up and down, day and night, during the showing of his picture, "When the Clouds Roll By."

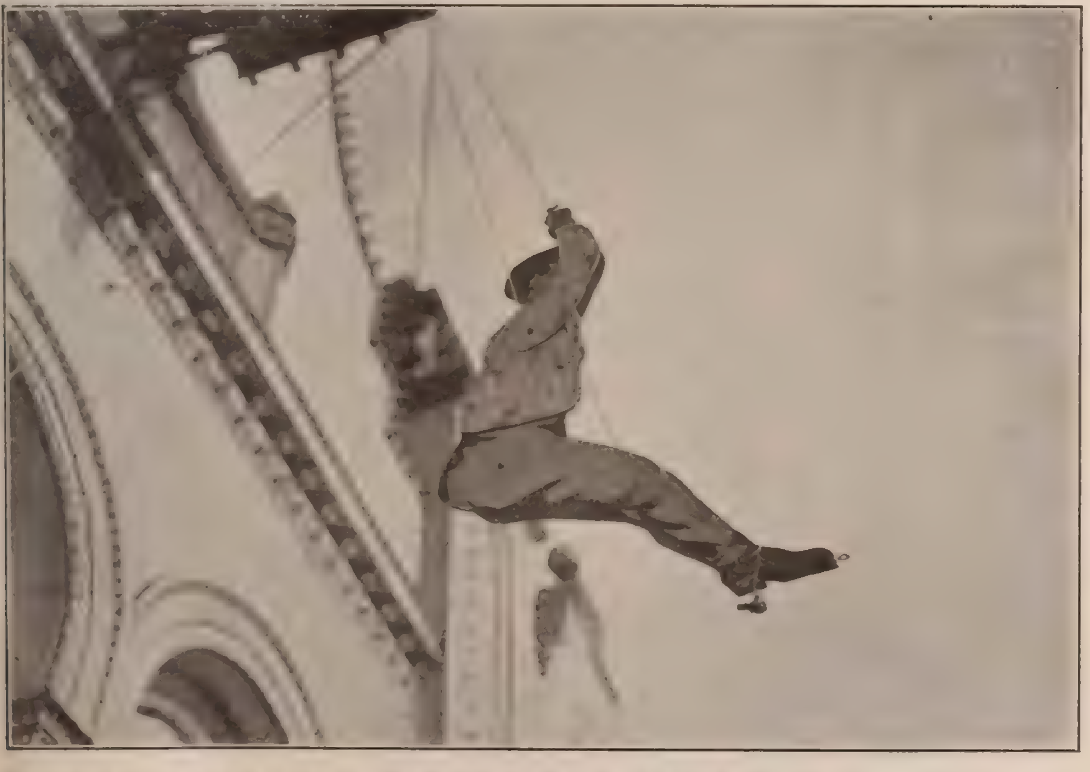
"People watched the performance for blocks away and speculated on whether it was a real human being or a dummy," was the manner in which T. M. Wooters, director of advertising and publicity of the Sun-Moon-Muse Theatres put it in his communication. Continuing he said, "The stunt was inexpensive, yet it attracted more attention than anything which has been done in Omaha in the way of picture exploitation in several years." The management is certainly to be complimented on this unique and clever idea.



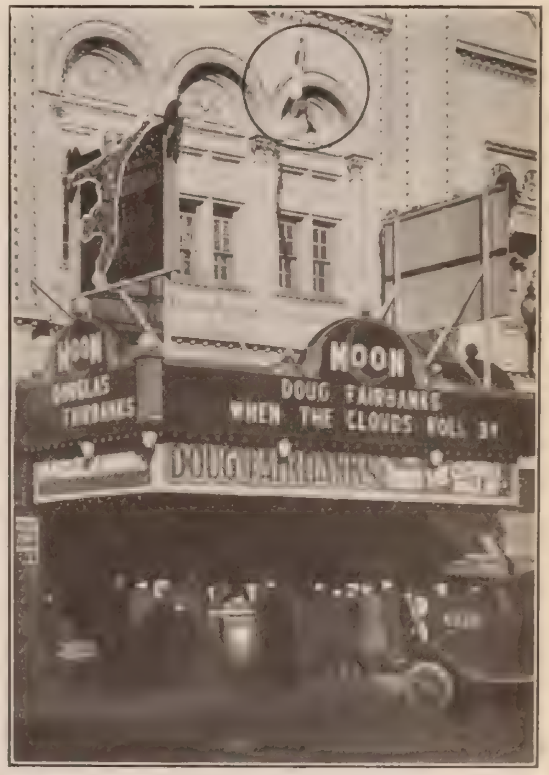
A float which paraded about the streets did good publicity service for the Moon on "When the Clouds Roll By."

But Manager Ballantyne didn't stop with that idea alone. He used two others in the exploitation of the Fairbanks production. The one was the releasing of numerous balloons attached to which were passes and heralds on the production, while the other was a parade of five hundred boys, each carrying a "sandwitch" sign on their back. Both these stunts caused much attention and the streets through which the parades passed were lined with thousands of people. People from every section of the community followed the balloons for miles endeavoring to become the proud possessor of a pass or two.

The newspapers were particularly generous to the management on the three stunts that were pulled and gave mention to every thing they did and the effect that it had on the community.



Here is a closeup view of the life size automaton with which the Moon theatre created a sensation advertising "When the Clouds Roll By."



Within the circle you will see the Moon's "man" about to climb his eighty-foot rope.

The final result was the box-office value on the exploitation ideas. Their communication on the matter speaks for itself, when the management state that their business was extraordinary during the entire week and that the Jumping Jack idea attracted many new faces to the box-office.

Friedlander Turns a Fourth Run Failure Into a First Run Possibility

TURNING a fourth run failure into a successful motion picture theatre which is nearing the goal of its ambitious manager to make it a first run house, by methods that any exhibitor can employ, is the exploit of A. Friedlander, manager of the Garden theatre, in the Borough Park section of Brooklyn.

His latest innovation is the abolition of odd pennies in admission prices, by increasing prices from 11 cents and 17 cents, including war tax, to ten and twenty cents, also including the tax. By doing so he eliminated a source of annoyance to his patrons and his cashier, overcame a situation which was reducing his patronage, and also increased his revenue.

Mr. Friedlander noted that as soon as cold weather arrived his patrons were not handled as expediously at the box-office as formerly. The first effect of this was a lateness in starting shows, because the opening was held until the waiting line had been accommodated, and then he noted that the number of "stayovers" for second performances was increasing to such a degree that frequently fire laws forced him into closing the doors long before the receipts indicated two capacity houses for the evening.

"I discovered the reason for the delay at the box-office merely by standing near the cashier during the rush. Nearly every patron wore gloves, and time was lost while patrons are picking up their pennies in change, which is a difficult matter with covered fingers. Indirectly this delay was the cause of the 'stayover,' as I learned from several of them whom I knew. They explained that they had been forced to wait so long for tickets in the cold lobby if they attempted to get in at the beginning of the first show that they had found it more convenient to come late for the first show and then see the part they had missed as it appeared on the second showing."

Mr. Friedlander had another reason for adopting the method he did to cure this difficulty. It was this; he had been paying more and more for pictures in order to get them early after release date, and the running costs of the theatre had mounted to a point where there was but little margin of profit despite a good patronage. Even while the theatre was in this condition he wanted to make a bigger outlay for better pictures. A computation of his box-office receipts showed him that adults comprised approximately two-thirds of his patronage, the other third being half priced. Two and one-half cents additional from each adult patron would be sufficient to give him a good return on his money and also permit him to supply the better service. By eliminating the war tax from the half price tickets and adding three cents to the admission charge to adult, if it could be done successfully, his difficulties would be solved.

Mr. Friedlander was not so lacking in diplomacy to announce a bald advance in prices. Instead he headed the new price list with the caption, "We will pay the War Tax," and under this, "No More Bother With Pennies." Then followed the announcement of the new prices.

Another policy which Mr. Friedlander has pursued is that of selling books of tickets at prices considerably under the regular admission. He is a staunch believer in the idea that tickets in the home are a constant incentive to attend the theatre.

"It brings a person to the theatre oftener in nine cases out of ten," said Mr. Friedlander. "Even in the tenth case you are sure of his patronage when he does go, for a man with tickets in his pocket is not going to pay cash to go to another theatre."

In speaking of the progress he has made in six months, Mr. Friedlander said:

"The first day I had the theatre I cancelled bookings of pictures which were favorites before "The Birth of a Nation" was filmed. To-day I booked Mary Pickford in "Heart o' the Hills" when every available print of it is being used by the Loew houses in Greater New York. We have thrown away the duster in the projection booth and now have pictures while they are still new enough for the titles to be legible. We are not a first run house yet, but we can afford the pictures while they are still being talked about."

If Mr. Friedlander does succeed in his ambition of making the Garden a first run house, it probably will be a record achievement. The house has a seating capacity of but 299, and except on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, when the showings are continuous, it runs but three performances daily, one in the afternoon and two in the evening.

Comfort and Efficiency in Manage Landau's Idea

WHEN cold weather set in, in Milwaukee, Le Landau, manager of the Butterfly theatre o that city, was somewhat up against it. All of th other downtown houses of importance had lon comfortable lobbies in which crowds waiting t gain admittance might wait comfortably remove from the wintry winds.

At the Butterfly, however, whenever the hous was filled, the waiting crowds were forced to stan in the cold on the sidewalk as the theatre was no blessed with a lobby, being built in the days whe a ten foot niche in the front wall was considere lobby enough.

Being raised in a residence which boasted of storm house at the front door each winter, Manager Landau decided to use the tried and true custom of his forefathers. Consequently he had carpenters construct a vestibule or stormshed acros the front of his theatre enclosing his box-effice.

The front of the "lobby" was faced with fiv sets of glass doors. These doors, Manager Landau discovered proved valuable added advertisin space for his displays. The accompanying photograph shows how he made use of the door in advertising "Everywoman." Each glass panel hel a lithographed cutout. These cutout figures wer surrounded with black water color paint whic set them offi exceptionally well. At night whe the lights in back of the doors were turned o each lithographed figure stood out in bright relie against its black background.

And They Say Exhibitors Have No Sense of Humor

C. R. BEACHAM, manager of the First Nationa Exchange at Atlanta, Ga., received the following reply from O. G. Draughore, at Ashburn, Ga. in reply to a foot-note on a letter asking the exhibitor "are you afraid of ghosts?" "Would yo sleep all night in a graveyard?"

"I'm the guy that put the 'leep' in 'sleep,' th 'one' in 'alone' and the 'grave in 'graveyard.' believe in ghosts only when passing such things by.'

The exhibitor added a few of his own questions to wit:

"Did you ever go fuzzy guzzy hunting? Do yo eat wampus pie"?

Mix Music and Aviation—Result Publicity

Live Wire Publicity Expert for the California Theatre Puts Over Clever Story

Eddie Horton and Milton Elliott as they looked before the aeroplane flight

SOMEWHERE around the California theatre of San Francisco a good publicity agent and a real newspaper man is holding forth. Following is a press story which the California "put over" in the San Francisco Bulletin. Speaking of the "put over" part we want to go on record as saying that we don't believe that the grouchiest, most dypspetic editor who ever lived would turn down this story even if he hated the "movies" like poison. Here is a nice little lesson for the publicity men who complain of having their best efforts thrown on the floor. Write 'em as this boy did and they will be used. All of which is a lot of praise in a way for a man we don't know, not even to his name.

Last night at the California theatre there was disappointment in the hearts of the patrons.

The organ and, incidentally, the organist, Eddie Horton, failed to "come up."

For the benefit of the uninitiated, the "coming up" of the organ keyboard and the musical wizard who presides at it, is accomplished something after the manner in which Mephistopheles used to ascend from the mysterious depths beneath the stage in those old-time theatrical productions when "Meph." was somewhat the vogue.

But last night, although the Market street picture house reverberated to the strains of the huge pipe organ, the keyboard and Horton failed to appear in the spotlight, and here's the reason:

Horton had an ambition. It was to fly. He met Milton Elliot, one of Omer Locklear's pilots, and was invited to fly over the city with him yesterday. He accepted.

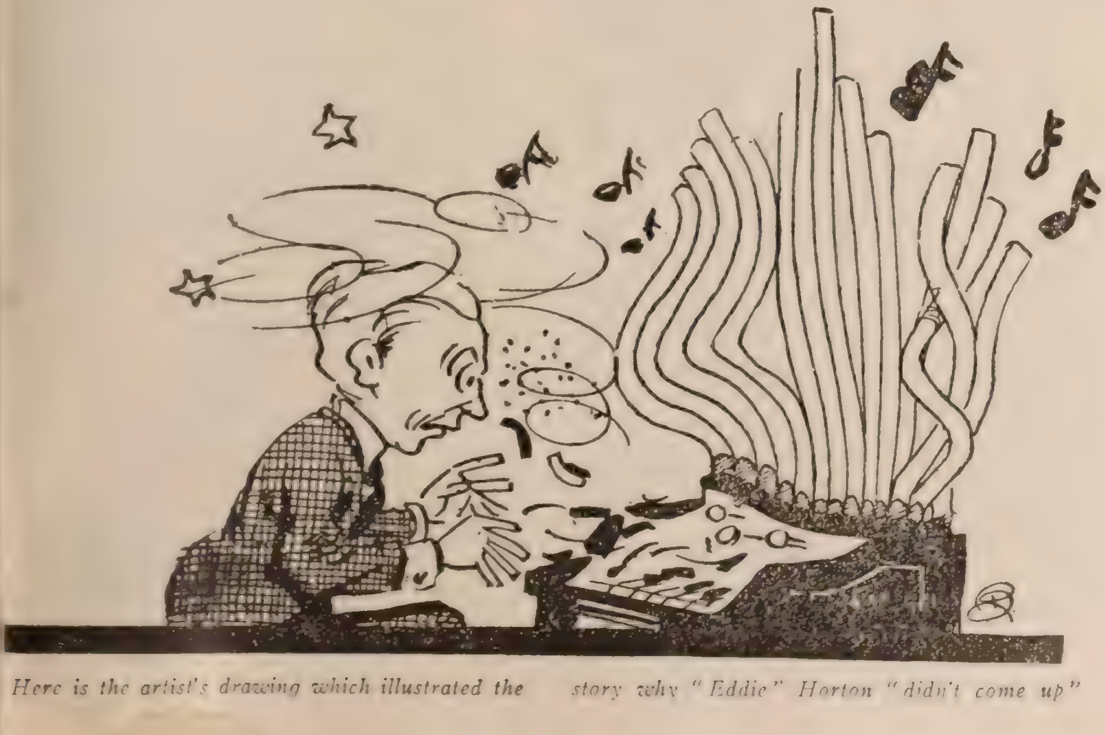
It seems that Horton, being what is technically known as "a game guy," told Elliot to go the limit and those who witnessed the flight of the Locklear planes yesterday can testify that he did.

There were loops and turns and twists and dips and other aerial gymnastics known only to Lieutenant Locklear and his pilots, and when the plane finally settled to the ground at Verney Field, a limp and dejected Eddie Horton was lifted out and tenderly laid on the grass to recuperate.

The organist was able, with assistance, to make his way to the theatre, but when he was settled at the keyboard, he could not summon the courage to press the button that raises the elevator upon which he and his keyboard are mounted.

"I've aviated all I can stand," declared Horton, when urged by an excited theatre manager to make his usual ascent so the audience could see him, and that ended it as far as the organ recital was concerned.

But when it comes to airplanes, it's a different matter and Horton says that he's game for another trial if Lieutenant Elliot will agree.



Here is the artist's drawing which illustrated the story why "Eddie" Horton "didn't come up"

Teaser Advertising Idea in a New Form

F. ZARTMAN, manager of the Strand Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, practiced a new form of teaser campaign recently in exploitation of a special feature attraction in co-operation with a local merchant.

A one-column portrait of Katherine MacDonald, who was soon to be seen at the Strand in "The Thunderbolt," was inserted in the ad of a local merchant, and readers of the Dayton Daily News were asked to identify the beautiful woman.

The firm of Meyer and Mendoza, hardware dealers, agreed to use the teaser campaign provided the answers were brought in person to the store. A space two columns by nine inches was devoted to the ad, half of which was taken up by the guessing contest.

The following word matter accompanied the picture: "Who Is She?" "We have arranged with one of the prominent photoplay houses that the first person who correctly tells her name and the company with which she is identified, will be given five tickets, each good for two persons; to the second person, three tickets; to the third two tickets; to the fourth one ticket. Answers must be brought to our store in person. No attention will be paid to answers by mail. Persons under 18 years of age need not submit replies. The name of the star above, together with the same picture, will be shown in our advertisement Monday of next week. After guessing—What Will It Be For Christmas?"

"So great was the crowd that was attracted to this showing of 'The Thunderbolt,' by our exploitation," said Mr. Zartman, "that a rival manager endeavoring to find seats for some of our overflow in the lobby and street, dispatched a banner bearer to parade in front of the people.

"Not a soul left the line however. All wanted to see Katherine MacDonald in 'The Thunderbolt,' and although inconvenienced by chilly weather, they were patient enough to wait for a chance to get a seat. The picture played to more money than any attraction we have shown since I have been manager. We congratulate ourselves on being able to show the pictures of such a star."

Rialto Theatre, San Francisco Gets Away With a New One

"PUTTING OVER" press stories seems to be an art which West Coast publicity men are especially proficient. The following is an account of how the Rialto theatre of San Francisco put over some unusual advertising on "The Tong Man."

As a basis for getting the attention of the public, the Rialto publicity staff used the feeling between the Chinese, Japanese and white residents of California.

Inspection of the cut accompanying this story will illustrate how this stunt was utilized better than words will describe it.

Following is the text of the Rialto's "newsstory" as it appeared in the space purchased on the motion picture page of the San Francisco Examiner. You will note that the heavy black rule top and bottom of the ad. is the only thing which indicates that the space was purchased.

Also note the care in framing a head which would carry out the idea that this was a news item.

Charging that the motion picture, "The Tong Man," in which Sessue Hayakawa, Japanese actor, plays the leading role, is Japanese propaganda to place the Chinese people in an unfavorable light, C. H. Chu, Chinese consul general in San Francisco, yesterday appealed to Chief of Police D. A. White, asking him to suppress the production of the film in this city.

A private showing of the film was given yesterday before the Chinese Chamber of Commerce, the Chinese Six Companies and representatives of the Chinese Consul.

This was followed by a request from the Consul to John L. McNab, attorney for the Six Companies, to take legal action to prevent the production.

Officials of the Six Companies said:

"The picture is outrageous. It is simply propaganda to mislead Americans as to the character of the Chinese."

Corporal Peter Pshon, head of the police morals squad, who has supervision of motion pictures, said that the picture was not immoral, but he did not approve of the wholesale murders and killings which are depicted in the film, including the slaying of San Francisco policemen.

Citing the instance of the suppression of a motion picture at the Panama Pacific Exposition here in which underground Chinatown life was shown, Attorney McNab said that injunction proceedings to prevent the picture being shown here probably will be taken.

"Until I see the picture I cannot say what will be done, but it is a fact that pictures have been stopped in which a group or class of people is misrepresented," said McNab.

"If we stop the picture here we will take the necessary legal steps in every other city in which it is advertised to appear."

"The Tong Man" is taken from "The Dragon's Daughter," a story by Clyde C. Westover. It is said to depict wars of the tongs and the activities of the "hatchet men."

Lee See Nam, editor in chief of Young China, a morning newspaper, said that all the Chinese who saw the picture considered it spite work on the part of the Japanese, who because of the recent boycott of their goods by the Chinese are very bitter and seek revenge.

It is absurd for a Japanese to play the part of a San Francisco "hatchet man," Nam said.

Contest Is Gratifying Business Builder

Susans and thousands of Susan admirers crowded the downtown stores to see the "Constance Binney" girl, the "Constance Binney" clothes she wore, the "Constance Binney" automobile she rode in, and to get "Constance Binney" passes, she was giving away.

It is needless to dwell on the gate receipts or the worn-out SRO sign was used at the Isis theatre on December 19 and the days that followed.

Thus ends a tale of what far reaching results can be gained from newspaper and manager when brains and common sense are applied to time-honored publicity stunts, for in its basic idea the "resemblance contest" is as old as the show business. In another form it has been the mainstay of the medicine show. It is an old trick with new clothes, but it went over because there was team work. Are you and your editors working in double harness or pulling against each other on the whiffletree?

The Teaser Idea Again

NOW and then some wide awake exhibitor con through with a good teaser idea and prov the point that this form of advertising pays profits and patrons, and, done correctly, does cost too much, either.

Here is a reproduction of eight pieces of co run on five successive days in the Kansas C Star by the Manager of the Liberty Theatre connection with the showing of the new Harc Lloyd two-reel comedies. On the first and seco days he used purely curiosity arousing squi breaking on the third day to two ads. on differe pages. The first attracted attention and hooked the preceding teasers and the second contained t announcement "See Captain Kidd's Kids." Th came two more, emphasizing the rare come elements and bearing the announcement, "Wat For 'Em."

On the last day he used two two-column displa one calculated to inspire the question "Where c I see Captain Kidd's Kids" and the other a tw column five-inch display of the theatre and date.

The teaser ad for use in exciting curiosity for comedy is something rather new. It calls attenti to the fact that exhibitors are waking up to the fa that the feature on the bill is not always the fiv reel subject, all of which is a sign of the continu progression that motion picture advertising in ge eral is making these days. It is not so long sin it was the custom to bill a comedy in the tradition "also a good comedy" style not even bothering give its title. Now it is not unusual to see comedy attraction getting the headlines.

Novelty Stunt for "Lasca"

A DECIDED novelty in the way of advertisi was used by Joe H. Sanderlin, manager the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Georgia, on Christm Day for the engagement of Frank Mayo in "Lasca

Mr. Sanderline had several thousand copies a folder printed with a complete copy of t famous old poem from which the picture adapt tion was made on one page and a photograph the star, Frank Mayo, on the other of the tv inside pages. The first page was devoted to t announcement of the special holiday progra under the caption of "Wishing you a Mer Christmas" and some other lines referring to t theatre, its manager, etc. The booklet was nice printed and was a souvenir worth carrying hom Since the poem is a classic the mere fact that person was able to obtain a copy of it regardle of the artistic manner in which the "wrappings were handed to him proved of great public i terest.

Gives Midnight Show to Ushe in New Year

ANOTHER midnight show to usher in the Ne Year is reported from the Garfield theatr Chicago, where Manager Charles H. Ryan ar his assistants staged a benefit performance for th employees of the house.

Several acts of vaudeville were given, all which went over with a bang. A special orchest was secured and the staging of the show was the hands of Joe Pilgrim, director of the Chicag Academy of Music. The Garfield was a vaudevil house back in 1910 and has ample equipment fo putting on vaudeville numbers.

Charles J. Shaefer, who owns the theatre, do nated the use of the house for the occasion. Th receipts were better than five hundred dollars ar enough was cleared after expenses were paid give each employee of the theatre a week's salar

It is the intention of Manager Ryan to make th midnight benefit show a yearly event, so succes ful has been his first attempt.

Grabs Front Page of Big Town Newspaper

Jack Kuhn, District Manager for Loew's Cleveland Theatres, Co-Operates with the Press in Show for Orphans

SUPPOSE, Mr. Exhibitor, that you were told you could get your next special feature attraction advertised on the front page of your favorite ocal newspaper every day for a week, and for a ost that would be far below the expense of one ad n an inside page!

You'd probably say that the author of the thought ad a well stocked cellar and used it too freely, vouldn't you?

Well, the stunt herein outlined was done.

Not in one of the one-horse towns of this fair and. But in one of the largest, Cleveland, Ohio.

And not in a small newspaper in Cleveland, but n the one with the largest circulation, a circulation lose to 200,000, the Cleveland Press.

Jack Kuhn, district manager for Loew's Ohio heatres, and his press agent, M. A. Malaney, are he two men who turned the trick.

The picture in question was " A Day's Pleasure," tarring Charles Chaplin, which was to run at oew's Stillman.

Here's how this theatrical coup-d'etat was pulled ff.

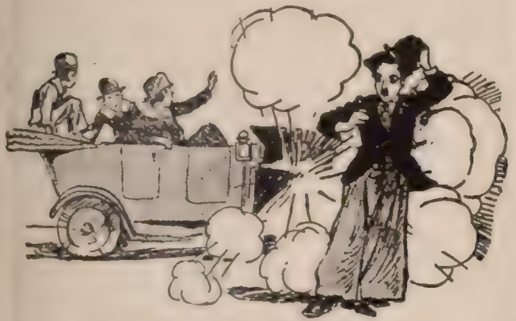
Malaney went to see the editor of the Press and told him that Loew's Stillman wanted to give a Christmas celebration for all the orphans in Cleveland. And that as the feature entertainment, " A Day's Pleasure " would be shown. Also candy would be given away. He explained, of course, that the only good the theatre would obtain from it would be in publicity. He further pointed out that if it were a joint show between the Press and the theatre it would reflect as much credit on the newspaper as on the theatre and that they were willing to call it such, feeling that the paper would then be more inclined to give it a large amount of publicity.

How Charlie Chaplin Found the Fun For Play Orphans Will See

Right on the front page with a scene " still " which is " going some " for a city like Cleveland.

The Cleveland Press is published on six days

1500 Orphans Coming To Press Party



At the Start of "A Day's Pleasure"

YOU might think that Henry Ford knows every trick that a flivver can do

You're wrong.

Who knows more about a " henry " than Henry does?

None other than C. Chaplin, who 'tis said invented the Laugh Ignition system for the Ford.

The orphans who attend The Press party, to be given in co-operation with Marcus Loew at Loew's Theater at 9:30 a. m. Tuesday, will see Charlie's Laugh Ignition system in full operation.

This is Chaplin's new First National picture, "A Day's Pleasure."

The orphans will be the first to see it

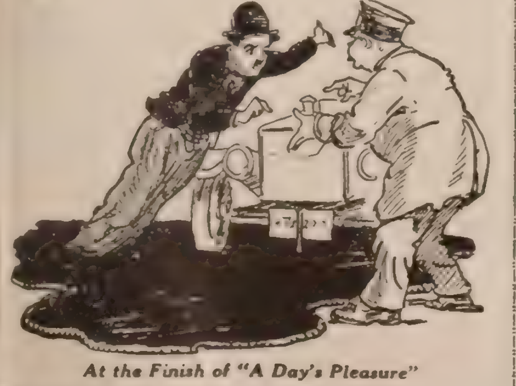
It won't be shown to the public till the following week at the Stillman.

The artist's drawings which embellish this announcement are tame beside the film itself.

And then there'll be other movies and music by the Stillman orchestra, and vaudeville by Charles Reilly and The Three Robins from Loew's Liberty, and free candy

There'll be more than 1500 children at the party

O, joy!



At the Finish of "A Day's Pleasure"

As a result of that little conference, readers of the Press found on the front page a large drawing done in the best style of Cartoonist Lavery of the Press. It was a large cartoon, three columns wide. Beneath it, this was to be read:

" He's on his way.

" Charlie Chaplin in his sick-cylindered flivver.

" Bent on 'A Day's Pleasure.'

" Not for Charlie, but for 1,500 or more youngsters in Cleveland Orphanages.

" They'll be the first to see Charlie's new movie.

" 'A Day's Pleasure' is its name.

" This will be at the Christmas show which the Press in co-operation with Marcus Loew has arranged to give at Loew's Stillman theatre, Tuesday, Dec. 23, at 9:30 a. m.

" The Chaplin film which will be shown for the first time at this performance will not be released for public exhibition till a week later.

" 'Twill be some show,' says Charlie Chaplin." " And that's no joke."

As every exhibitor knows, space on the front page of a big daily newspaper can't be bought. Not for a $100,000 or $200,000 for that matter. The only way to break into the front page of a newspaper is with real news. The best press agent in the world doesn't expect to break into the front page and is pleasantly surprised when any of his stuff does get there. Consequently, Malaney, in the parlance of the game, " had put something over."

The next day saw the front page of the Press adorned with a three column cut of Chaplin in his flivver.

The article following showed that Malaney was alive to his game. Big newspapers want big news only. An item sounding " press-agenty " doesn't make page one of a big newspaper under any circumstances. So rather than let his oprhan show get only perfunctory notice on the second day Malaney was there with a real story.

This told how Chaplin had watched the policeman at Broadway and 42nd Street to get pointers on traffic.

The article was one that everyone read and that stuck in their minds. Small wonder—the Press had one of its best men assigned to write the dope for the orphan show.

The article started:

" When Patrolman Larry O'Toole blows his whistle the world moves or stands still.

" A mighty man is Patrolman O'Toole.

" He's so mighty that 40,000 men and women and children passed him one day a while ago at 42nd st. and Broadway in New York and not one of them failed to notice him.

" But everyone of them failed to recognize the dapper young man who stood at his elbow asking questions and getting pointers.

" Yet the little man is familiar to millions who never heard of Patrolman O'Toole.

" The little man who makes all the world laugh. He's Charlie Chaplin, and says Patrolman O'Toole, he was getting pointers for his new movie for funny things happen every minute at a busy corner like mine."

Then followed details of how the Press and Marcus Loew had arranged for a party for Cleveland orphans at which Chaplin's newest picture for First National would be shown.

All Louisville Goes Shopping With Fred Dolle's Propaganda Bags

A STOUT colored woman sat in a Louisville, Ky., street car last week, and although hardly a prize beauty, she was the center of attraction.

She was carrying gently in her arms a large bag of foodstuffs and while the leg of a chicken sticking out of the bundle might have been the cause of fascination for the travelers, there was a legend printed in red letters on the outside of the bag which could not be missed. Here it is:

"Buy your provisions from A. Bass, 201 West Jefferson Street. See 'Soldiers of Fortune' by Richard Harding Davis at the Alamo Theatre, week of December 28th."

"Not high-brow advertising by any means," in the opinion of Fred Dolle, proprietor of the Alamo Theatre, who arranged an extensive series of exploitation stunts for the run of the Allan Dwan production at his Louisville theatre, "but it sure was see-able."

After inducing the Louisville Evening Post to sponsor a special showing of the film for the Boy Scouts of the city, at which Major-General Charles P. Summerall, commandant of Camp Zachary Taylor spoke, and after getting the complete endorsement of the local branch of the American Legion and after providing five of the biggest stores in town with provision bags and after devising other exploitation, Mr. Dolle opened the photoplay at the Alamo.

Such was the interest aroused by the tie-up between the Louisville Post and Mr. Dolle's Scout performance on New Year's morning that immediately the newspaper was besieged with requests from the colored Boy Scouts, who asked a similar showing for their organization. Although conditions in Louisville prevented a combination of the two bodies of young Americans, Mr. Dolle decided that the colored youngsters' patriotism should not go unrequited, and he gave them a special showing at the colored citizens' theatre on Saturday morning.

Mr. Dolle started out a week in advance with a small blind advertisement depicting a South American revolutionist, and mentioning merely that "Soldiers of Fortune" was coming. Later, the name of the theatre appeared under this advertisement, and when the comment showed itself to warrant more space, Mr. Dolle ran a large two-column display, featuring a scene from the photoplay and in big letters the announcement: "All records smashed. The largest crowds in the history of the Alamo yesterday saw 'Soldiers of Fortune.'"

A special edition of 7,500 "Soldiers of Fortune" shopping bags were distributed to five of the biggest provision shops in Louisville. The outstanding feature which distinguished this stunt from others of its kind was that the name of each individual tradesman was printed on the quota of bags given him with the advice to patronize his shop.

Buffalo Theatre Installs Second Orchestra

SHEA'S Hippodrome, Buffalo, now features tw orchestras, one the regular symphony orche tra of 35 men and the other a jazz organizatio with a personnel consisting of the best musicia of this type in the country. This new jazz ban has taken like wild fire at the Hippodrome an audiences seem never to get enough. Harold I Franklin, managing director, introduced the stu a few weeks ago and it was such a success that h decided to make the Hipp Jazz Band, as it is ad vertised, a permanent institution at the big Buffal house.

The Jazz Band is used to accompany the com edies only. The men are placed in the orchestr pit, while the regular orchestra is in the stag proper. The jazz outfit not only serves to put pe into the comedy accompaniment, but also relieve one of the organ intervals. It also gives variety t the program—that much sought-after quality. Th difference in the grade of music between the sym phony orchestra and the jazzapationists is s marked that the change seems to put new life int the audience and anyone who might be tempted t become disinterested during the showing of a lon feature is instantly awakened when these jazzer begin to operate.

While of necessity this idea is of value only t those larger houses that can afford the expense o putting in an additional orchestra it is again proo of the unlimited possibilities of presentation of th motion picture program de luxe.

A special director conducts the syncopationists and not only does this relieve the regular orchestr conductor from the responsibility of screening an arranging music for the comedy but in this way th comedy is treated by a musician who makes specialty of selecting the musical accompanimen for the fun films only. Consequently the music fo the comedy is just as carefully prepared as for th biggest features. It is a treat to the ear, and relieves the big orchestra from playing a cheape although more popular grade of music. This give the men of the larger outfit an opportunity to concentrate on a higher grade of music for the othe pictures on the program.

It is the opinion of Mr. Franklin that the jaz orchestra has a tendency to lift the spirit of the audience and that an ordinary comedy can in man cases be worked up into a most enjoyable bit o film fun. The Jazz orchestra, he says, is particularly effective for Mack Sennett, Chaplin, and Sunshine comedies.

Then there is the advertising angle which mus not be discounted. A theatre can advertise two orchestras and judging from the appreciative crowds at Shea's Hippodrome patrons are enthusiastic over the innovation. It is a real box-office magnet. The instrumentation is complete from the jazz point of view. The sizzling saxophones, the trembling trombones, the battering banjorines, the cantering clarinets, the cannonading cornets and the peppery percussion—all are there.

Together with the soloists, stage settings, overtures, etc., this new jazz orchestra aids greatly in putting a Shea's Hippodrome presentation in a class that is just about "Non Plus Ultra."

Kalamazoo Open For Novel Exploitation

How Arthur A. Frudenfield Put Over "Heart of the Hills" At His Regent Theatre

Cart and donkey exploitation used by Arthur A. Frudenfield of the Regent theatre, Kalamazoo, for "Heart o' the Hills"

DEMONSTRATING that cities under the 50,000 population mark are just as susceptible to appropriate exploitation as the larger towns, Arthur A. Frudenfield, publicity man for the Regent theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., recently staged a profitable and inexpensive campaign capable of being duplicated by other exhibitors.

The campaign consisted of a unique lobby display, an original interpretive prologue, a street parade novelty and clever use of display advertising in addition to a number of heralds printed on a light card board five by four inches in size.

The front of the theatre was covered by a canvas painting intended to represent a crude log cabin in "the heart of the hills." A fir tree and a bit of foliage on each side gave the desired effect. The display required not quite half a day's time on the part of the local sign painter and although inexpensive, attracted wide attention.

By cutting out the figure in the 24-sheet of Mary Pickford mounted on a donkey and pasting it to cut-out board, Mr. Frudenfield found he had a most attractive lobby figure. This cut-out was a new thing to Kalamazoo and local newspapers commented interestingly about it.

Probably the most novel feature of the exploitation involved the riding of a girl (with curls similar to Mary Pickford's) attired in the garb of Mavis Hawn on the back of an eccentric donkey through the business streets of Kalamazoo. Had the animal been a trained circus performer it could hardly have caused more excitement.

Signs tacked on the cart with which the donkey pulled announced the showing of "Heart O' The Hills," Mary Pickford's latest production. Providing there were no onlookers the donkey would travel ahead in a progressive manner. But as soon as he reached a street intersection trouble ensued and oftentimes the assistance of a traffic officer was needed to conduct the animal across the street.

Local newspapers thought this a great joke and praised Mr. Frudenfield for his novel method of announcing the Mary Pickford feature.

The prologue which served to incite a great amount of word-of-mouth advertising was staged to represent a twilight in the Kentucky hills. A lonesome youth was pictured sitting before a small fire. And of all the songs written and dedicated to Mary Pickford, Mr. Frudenfield selected "Oh, What A Pal Was Mary," to properly interpret the feelings of the youth when the little mountain girl left the log cabin for a world far away.

This exploitation, which cost but a comparatively small sum, put over "Heart O' The Hills" with one of the best box office records in the history of the Regent.

Other notices followed during the week, each one possessing a novelty about it that made it worth having.

One had a line drawing showing Chaplin arguing with a copper. Another was illustrated with pictures of Chaplin and the vaudeville performers who took part in the show.

The day of the show, the Press carried on its second page, across the whole top of the page—eight columns wide—pictures snapped by their own photographer of the orphans who attended the show.

"The show was worth a lot more than an advertisement for our week's run of the Chaplin picture," says Malaney, "and anyone connected with the show business can see how great that was.

"It also means good will for us for a year to come.

Brown's Midnight Show Figuratively and Literally "Howling "Success

NOBODY ever sleeps in Memphis, Tenn., on New Year's eve and it looks like somebody with the Memphis Enterprises, Inc., in that city seldom goes to sleep while there's a chance to put something over in the show business.

From this wide-awake metropolis of the South comes news of the first midnight movie show ever staged in that city and right off the reel it was a "howling" success. "Howling" in this instance, is used advisedly for howling on New Year's eve is certainly one of the few things left to mankind in this year of our Lord, 1920, A.D.

The cause for the over-abundance of exuberance in that city on New Year's eve was the most successful performance at the Strand theatre, one of the biggest playhouses in the string of seven operated by The Memphis Enterprises, Inc., of which C. A. McElravy is general manager, and G. E. Brown director of publicity and advertising. While this organization has been smashing box-office records right and left at its theatres during the past few months, all previous one-performance records went by the boards New Year's eve when the doors were opened for the first midnight movie at 11 o'clock.

With only two days in which to put over the show, Mr. Brown got busy, booked two classy dancing and singing acts, one with a pony ballet and then plastered the four leading dailies with teaser ads, photographic layouts of the girls and readers about the midnight attraction. The result was that the dear public just had to read about the show whether it was looking for it or not.

At 10 o'clock New Year's eve, an hour before the doors were to be opened, the crowd couldn't find room on the sidewalk in front of the Strand and good-naturedly surged into the street. It crowded and spread for nearly an hour, getting larger every minute and an appeal was made for extra police to clear traffic in the street.

Many who went in the theatre for the last regular performance had purchased special tickets and remained for the midnight show, but despite the capacity of the theatre, two or three hundred were turned away unable to gain admission.

Once inside the theatre, the crowd began to have its fun. The Strand orchestra jazzed for all it was worth while four reels of Fatty Arbuckle and other comedies were run off and then the big stunts came on as the house was darkened and the midnight gong was sounded.

Considering the fact that the new year was symbolized by the march of a camel across the stage, led by a young "1920" clad in a plug hat and little else, the affair was a hilarious greeting to the successor of 1919.

The stunt proved itself a big publicity feature for the theatre and a winning financial stroke. Besides providing real entertainment for nearly 2,000 persons, it established a precedent which will be followed next year with an elaborate show, not only at the Strand but at the Majestic in Memphis, with really big features and big time prices.

Blazing a Trail of Exploitation Through the Southwest With Branham

FOR six months the motion picture field in lower Arkansas and the State of Texas has been the scene of the most extraordinary newspaper advertising, publicity and exploitation campaign that the Southwest has ever seen. Where newspaper space had been used at the rate of several inches a day for each theatre, quarter and half page spread became the vogue. Box-office receipts increased in proportion to the increased advertising, more people were thronging the theatres and the entire industry seemed to take a new lease on life or at least added interest in the motion picture theatre as an institution.

The lead in this smashing publicity campaign was taken by Charles G. Branham, who joined the S. A. Lynch forces in Atlanta last Spring after several years of successful theatre management and exploitation in Detroit and Minneapolis, and who arrived in Dallas, Texas, last September to direct the advertising and publicity campaign which started with the entrance of Lynch in the Texas field in opposition to E. H. Hulsey. After several months' battle the Hulsey and Lynch forces consolidated, thereby bringing thirty-five theatres in fifteen cities under one banner. The merger, however, did not end the publicity campaign. If anything, the work inaugurated by Mr. Branham was augmented.

Shortly after Mr. Branham arrived in Dallas, going there from Birmingham, Ala., where he put on "The Miracle Man" after a publicity campaign that was the talk of the South for weeks afterwards, he had his battle plans drawn up and sent for three Minneapolis newspaper men, Sam C. DePass, John Keefe and C. R. West. With this trio of newspaper men Mr. Branham mapped out a line of advertising and news matter that was different than had ever been attempted before in the South or Southwest or in any other section of the country. It was Mr. Branham's idea to have the advertising and publicity for theatres in the district handled in the home office of the district instead of leaving it to individual house managers to lay out their own campaigns, write their own copy and decide just how much should be spent on each picture, as had been the custom.

After several months of competition with the Hulsey organization, a consolidation was effected with S. A. Lynch Enterprises, known as the Southern Enterprises of Texas. With the consolidation Mr. Branham's department gained the services of Jean Finley, who had been in charge of the advertising for the Dallas theatres of E. H. Hulsey. With more theatres to handle Mr. Branham devised the scheme of dividing the district into sections, giving each assistant a section with a certain number of theatres, the responsibility for the proper exploitation of each theatre resting solely with the assistant.

Mr. Branham usually worked independently of the advertising matter and press books sent out by producers. As soon as a picture was available at the Dallas exchanges it was shown in the private projection room of the Southern Enterprises. With the arrival of newspaper photographs Mr. Branham directed the making of layouts and size of advertisements and a complete campaign was made ready for the first run of the picture in the Southwest. This campaign was turned over to the assistant in whose territory the picture would have its first showing and as it covered the entire district the campaign would be passed on to the other members of Mr. Branham's staff.

The keynote of Mr. Branham's ad copy was the black spot, circle, square or oval or golden spot, set off by white space. Nothing was permitted in any copy, aside from the name of the star, title and name of theatre, except short, breezy, newsy descriptive matter; stereotyped superlatives were barred. Mr. Branham believes ad copy should be as entertaining, snappy and "punchful" as newspaper headlines and accordingly had ads written so the newspaper reader might cast his eye over the theatre advertisement and get it all at first glance the same as he does newspaper headlines. That idea naturally brought into play the principles of the black spot and plenty of white space. Liberal use was also made in the advertisements of attractive reproductions of star and scene photographs.

Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Builds Fine Lobby Display

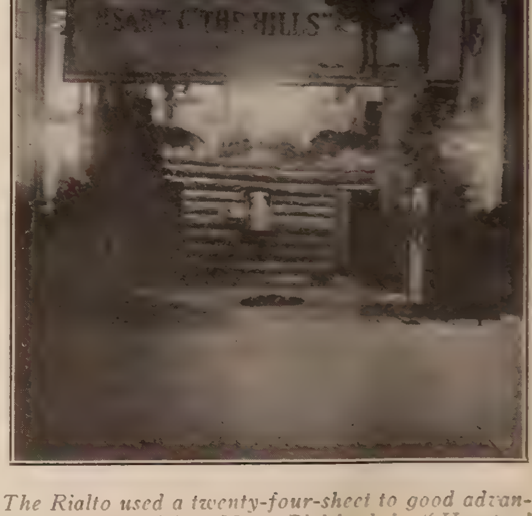
THE atmosphere of those homelike touches that naturally attach themselves to a cabin in the hills of Kentucky was transplanted to the lobby of the Rialto theatre, Augusta, Ga., in an exploitation campaign conceived and designed by Frank J. Miller, manager of that theatre.

This lobby was used for three days during the showing of "Heart o' the Hills," Mary Pickford's latest production for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and was supplemented by the exploitation aid of newspaper display advertisements centered chiefly on the fact that this production showed Miss Pickford in a number of new characterizations.

The basis for the cabin scene which the lobby was intended to depict was built upon a canvas painting so designed as to represent the side of a log-wedged cabin. A fir tree placed on each side of the lobby, an axe inbedded in a pine log, the grindstone and a lonesome but familiar looking buggy wheel resting against the side of the house made the arrangement very suggestive of the mountain regions.

The whole display was remarkably inexpensive and according to Mr. Miller contributed in a great measure to the success of the picture, not only financially, but in its presentation it aided in providing an atmosphere such as is aimed at in a prologue number. Viewing the lobby display from in front and close enough so the range of vision was brought within the lobby itself it was not hard to imagine that one had been spirited from a main street of a busy city and was about to enter a log cabin of the mountains, so realistic was the creation devised by Mr. Miller. The added touches in the way of properties such as the wagon wheel and grindstone Mr. Miller decided were worth while all the trouble he had in locating them, after hearing the remarks of the Rialto patrons who stopped to comment on the display.

Stretching across the foyer and above the sidewalk was a 24 sheet showing Miss Pickford mounted on the donkey which plays so large a part in the picture.



The Rialto used a twenty-four-sheet to good advantage in advertising Mary Pickford in "Heart o' the Hills"

Rothapfel Blends Music With the Picture

Langorous Southland Atmosphere Brought to California Theatre to Aid Picture Presentation

SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE

Standing outside a theatre in the winter time is not such a hardship in California, according to what one judges from this photograph taken while "Soldiers of Fortune" was playing at the California theatre, Los Angeles

A COOK'S TOUR to South America might have given the audience of the California theatre, Los Angeles, a better idea of the land of guitars and revolutionists, but Samuel L. Rothapfel came very near to it in an elaborate presentation of "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production.

A dignified setting that depended largely on the expert manipulation of lighting effects and the soothing quality of langorous music was responsible for the distinctive way in which this good dramatic material got across.

Let it be said that the reign of art did not proceed alone in the California theatre. There was capacity business and more, as the accompanying illustrations will show.

Henry Dougherty, the film writer of the Los Angeles Express, thought so much of the Rothapfel presentation of "Soldiers of Fortune" that he gave the performance an accurate and detailed review in his newspaper. Mr. Dougherty's review follows:

"S. L. Rothapfel, always original and sometimes daring in his conception of picture presentation—inserting touches of artistry here and throwing a dash of color there—springing new innovations and surprising the public as well as competitors, has reached the heights of daring and originality in his presentation of the California program this week.

"Twelve minutes after Allan Dwan's magnificent cinema spectacle, 'Soldiers of Fortune,' is under way, and after we have met his characters in the desert of Arizona and later in the millionaire's ballroom in New York, the picture fades out and the stage is flooded with a glow of amber and gold. Out of the shadows comes human beings, singing and dancing, and blending with the flood of color we hear dreamy melodies of South American music.

"The illusion lasts a few minutes. The lights are dimmed, melodies join their echoes and then the screen flashes back to us a panorama of a South American city. One seems to have stepped from the warm presence of real living people into their own city as the characters of the play again are assembled and we find the locale transferred from gay old New York to the mining camps of the foothills of the Andes.

"The cut into the feature is a daring innovation, to say the least, but Mr. Rothapfel has done it successfully. The continuity of the story has not been interrupted, but rather the action has been accelerated. Certainly the South American atmosphere introduced at this time prepares us better than any subtitle for our entrance with the characters of the play into that land of jealousies and revolutions.

"The musical score throughout the presentation blends with the spirit of the offering, raging and roaring when the battle rages and roars and changing quickly to softer tones when lovers of the play make love to each other."

Detectives Lose Scent (Not Cent) at End of Fourth Reel

THE Chief of Police scratched his head at the end of the fourth reel and tried to figure it out.

The staff of detectives racked their brains, fitted clue to clue and tried to recall similar, perplexing situations.

But "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" remained a mystery, and the fifty-dollar prize offered by C. Floyd Hopkins for the solution of the detective film at his Victoria Theater, Harrisburg, Pa., remained safely in the box-office.

It was part of an extensive exploitation campaign arranged by Mr. Hopkins for the run of this Chautard feature. Mr. Hopkins had invited the Chief of Police of Harrisburg, as well as every available detective and a representative from each local newspaper to view four reels of the photoplay and do their best, with the big prize in view, to solve the baffling story whose explanation was contained in the final reel, which has not been shown.

According to the originators of the unique exploitation stunt, the detectives declared "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" to be a most interesting and thrilling picture, and the fact that the $50 prize was unclaimed indicated that the sleuths meant what they said. The newspapers looked upon the affair as one of the few really novel publicity stunts, and as such they gave it appropriate attention.

Mr. Hopkins handled the run of the Emil Chautard production with the utmost skill, from the advertising and billing on the picture to the lobby display, which effectively gave passersby the compelling sense of mystery of the film.

A special room was built into the lobby of the Victoria. This was modelled accurately after the room of mystery that plays such a vital part in the film. Yellow was the predominating color, a yellow stand, yellow lamp, yellow rug, yellow furniture, and above, the haze of a yellow light.

Tracks were painted on the floor resembling the footprints that are part of the detective's problem, and this feature was amplified by Mr. Hopkins with an offer of free admission to anyone who could match these tracks with his own shoes. The design of the foot-marks were laid entering the lobby and proceeding up to the box-office windows and thence to the yellow room where a card announced the admission offer to any foot fitting the mark.

According to the theatre officials many persons were attracted by the novel advertising, most of them, not so much for the chance of getting in free as for the fun of playing the game, and involving themselves in the mystery.

In conjunction with the drawing power of the Yellow Room lobby, Mr. Hopkins benefited by the results of good mystery-advertising. The double perplexity arising from a newspaper campaign that stirred up wonder and interest, and a lobby that carried it out to the last, mysterious detail was responsible for arousing interest in the picture.

The Press Book by the Men Who Use Them

A Series of Articles Secured by C. L. Yearsley, Director of Publicity and Advertising for the First National Exhibitor's Circuit.

THERE are two professions which should have attention when they "cuss" or discuss the producer's press book; the exhibitor or his publicity man and the motion picture editor of a newspaper. These people use the press book more or less according to the value of the ideas contained as the individual reader figures it.

Therefore the following articles will be interesting. The first is by the motion picture editor of the Nashville Banner, who, because of a rule of this paper forbidding any employee to sign an article for publication, we are unable to give personal credit for his story. The second article is by Eugene Perry, manager of the T. and D. theatre of Oakland, Cal.

Both these stories contain information and opinions which are entitled to your careful consideration.

BY THE MOVING PICTURE EDITOR

Nashville Banner

WITH reputable moving picture concerns turning out expensive feature productions and maintaining costly publicity departments solely for the proper exploitation of their features, it is but natural that the manufacturers want the best possible returns from the efforts of the department. But what the manufacturers want the public to know about their pictures and what the newspapers want for their moving picture sections are so widely varied at times that the press matter submitted finds its way to the waste basket in many cases where a more carefully arranged item would be welcomed to appear in public print. Many good church members among the newspaper copy readers have been lost solely through the efforts of press agents of various kinds, and the bughouse has claimed not a few. Others will follow as long as poorly written copy pours in on the man with the shears and pencil.

In calling attention to a few of the details which the papers do not want, it is with a view of helping get better copy and not with the intention of belittling the work of any company's press department.

In the first place, the majority of companies fail to prepare actual publicity notices suitable for immediate print. They think they do so when they string out three columns side by side and mark one "advance release," another "first day's showing" and a third "last day's run." The idea of classifying the three is all right so far as ideas go, but in a number of cases the value of that particular bit of publicity ceases with the idea itself. The man working under a rain of copy will run across a picture booked at the Grand theatre and will turn to the press sheet for a notice to run in the moving picture section of his Sunday issue. He picks out an "advance notice" and clips it. Reading through the first paragraph or so to find an appropriate head line, he encounters something like this:

"Did you ever hear of 'Grandma's' lace? Do you think it could be found on the market today? Indeed, it could not! No siree! But pretty Susie Shoestrings, when a child of eleven, found a piece of this rare old material and packed it away in her doll trunk. When she grew up and graduated from the soap factory into the moving picture studios she happened to think of it! Then she had a famous dress-maker from China, who knitted a shawl for the queen of the hula-hulas in 1901, come to America and sew it onto the gown which she wears in 'The Brain of Marble,' a thrilling feature which costs $2,000,000 to produce and which was photographed by Bo N. Head and directed by Ime A. Fish. Don't fail to see this wonderful spectacle! You will enjoy it!"

The copy reader takes another puff from a stogie and listlessly brushes the whole copy sheet off the desk with his elbow into a waste basket already teeming with the same kind of truck.

What's the matter with that notice? It doesn't give an inkling of the story which the reader wishes to know about or which may catch his or her glance on the page. It's full of exclamation marks, which attempt to put a punch in every sentence when there is no more punch to the whole story than there is ice in the Panama Canal. It puts the newspaper in the attitude of a booster for the picture, recommending it to each of its readers as the most astounding feature of all time and urging them by all means to lay off from work the next day and stand in line for a ticket. It is a veritable recommendation to the public that the paper endorses the film, the camera man, the producer and the rest of the business with all its power. What is the result? The picture fan goes to see it, emerges in the second reel with wrinkles on the brow and murder in the heart. He may read another notice. The same recommendation, worded differently for another picture. Then—why do the papers print that kind of stuff? No wonder the press is unreliable.

Omit the exclamation marks. It's a cheap way to try and make a reader's hair stand on end and his breath come in jerks. Leave out all ancient history about what the alleged star did in her own home town before she entered the studios.

Don't tell how many hundred thousand a picture cost when its really an ordinary five-reeler. Don't raise the actor's salary so high.

The public cares little for camera men. Pay the camera man a good salary if necessary, but keep his name out of print. Also the producer when he is not a super "star" himself.

Write in newspaper style above all things. Don't try to imitate a story of a police court comedy or a battle with bootleggers at night, but start off in plain English, mentioning the name of the star and production as early as possible, and giving a brief outline, or at least an intimation of what kind of a story it is, without going into family history or faking up an "interview" in a New York press agent's office with a star several thousand miles distant on the Pacific coast. The much-abused public has been wise to the "interview" proposition for quite a while.

The company which puts out short, concise and to-the-point notices, set apart from a mass of worthless reading matter, will soon make itself known to the moving picture editor and he will seek out their copy sheet every time when he needs a filler for the page, to say nothing of getting in the proper reading notices on the same dates the ads are run.

Brevity is a feature which should be given the utmost consideration. Space is limited and a synopsis, to be run for instance in a Sunday paper, should be cut clear of byplay and only the direct thread of the theme permitted to remain.

The best companies show a tendency to improve their sheets. The sooner it becomes general the greater will be the value of publicity departments.

BY EUGENE PERRY

Manager, T. & D. Theatre, Oakland, California

I NEVER depend solely upon a press sheet, and the reasons for this are many. In the first place, I find that dozens of exchange managers are criminally negligent in the matter of supplying material to exhibitors for work. I believe that were theatre managers to depend upon the exchanges for material, there would be many failures in the course of a year. They seem to work along the lines that a press sheet is just so much bunk anyway, that a live manager doesn't want it and this attitude has done more to destroy confidence in the advertising upon which producers spend thousands of dollars in money and limitless time than any one thing. It does not impress me as deliberate but this carelessness is contagious, and dangerous, too.

I find press sheets, when I can get them in time, of untold value. It is possible that in a given production it may never be necessary or advisable to take their stories or advertisements for use without changes for every city and every theatre has a varying cosmopolitan clientele and what is successful with some people is absolutely valueless in another community.

There is one infallible rule that should be followed in preparing matter for exploitation and that is to supply the exchanges with enough pictures—stills I mean. Various productions require various styles but they should be supplied in great quantities for they can be utilized in many ways. Take a well known star for instance, people are not so much interested in seeing his picture in character or costume as his reputation makes any one of these of great drawing power, but when they see this star in a natural pose, they are irresistibly drawn to see just what he or she is going to play. Yet exchanges are invariably short on this kind of pictures. Where it is a big scenic production, stars fade into the background and photographs of dramatic scenes should be supplied for the manager depends on them in a case such as that, to excite dramatic interest.

Posters are the greatest aid to photoplay success, providing they are not lurid in their make-up. Last week I played Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum" and I did the biggest business I ever did at this theatre. I could attribute the success of this picture to a number of reasons and know that her popularity and cleverness is a big asset, but I want to say right here that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit surpassed every previous effort, at least to my knowledge, in the paper put out for billboards—in fact surpassed efforts of any distributors in some time, and to the excellence of the paper I attribute ome measure of success.

It was a distinct step away from the lurid and toward the artistic. The mention of the name of Pickford creates interest and this added to the beauty of the twenty-four sheet made a wonderful combination. It was marvelously colored, sort of a buff background with an artistically done scroll work that was perfectly executed. The working out of the name of the play "The Hoodlum" in a script letter and the bringing out of the name Mary Pickford, gave the impression of a great bronze tablet and I noticed hundreds of people stop and gaze on the poster.

Posters are invaluable and require great attention. I consider the paper of the Select pictures as the premier work of this kind. The coloring, refinement and artistic makeup stamps the man who is responsible as a finished workman.

Abelson's Exploitation Makes New Patrons

Lobby Decoration and Prologue Numbers Are Not Just Advertising, Says the New Lyric's Enterprising Manager

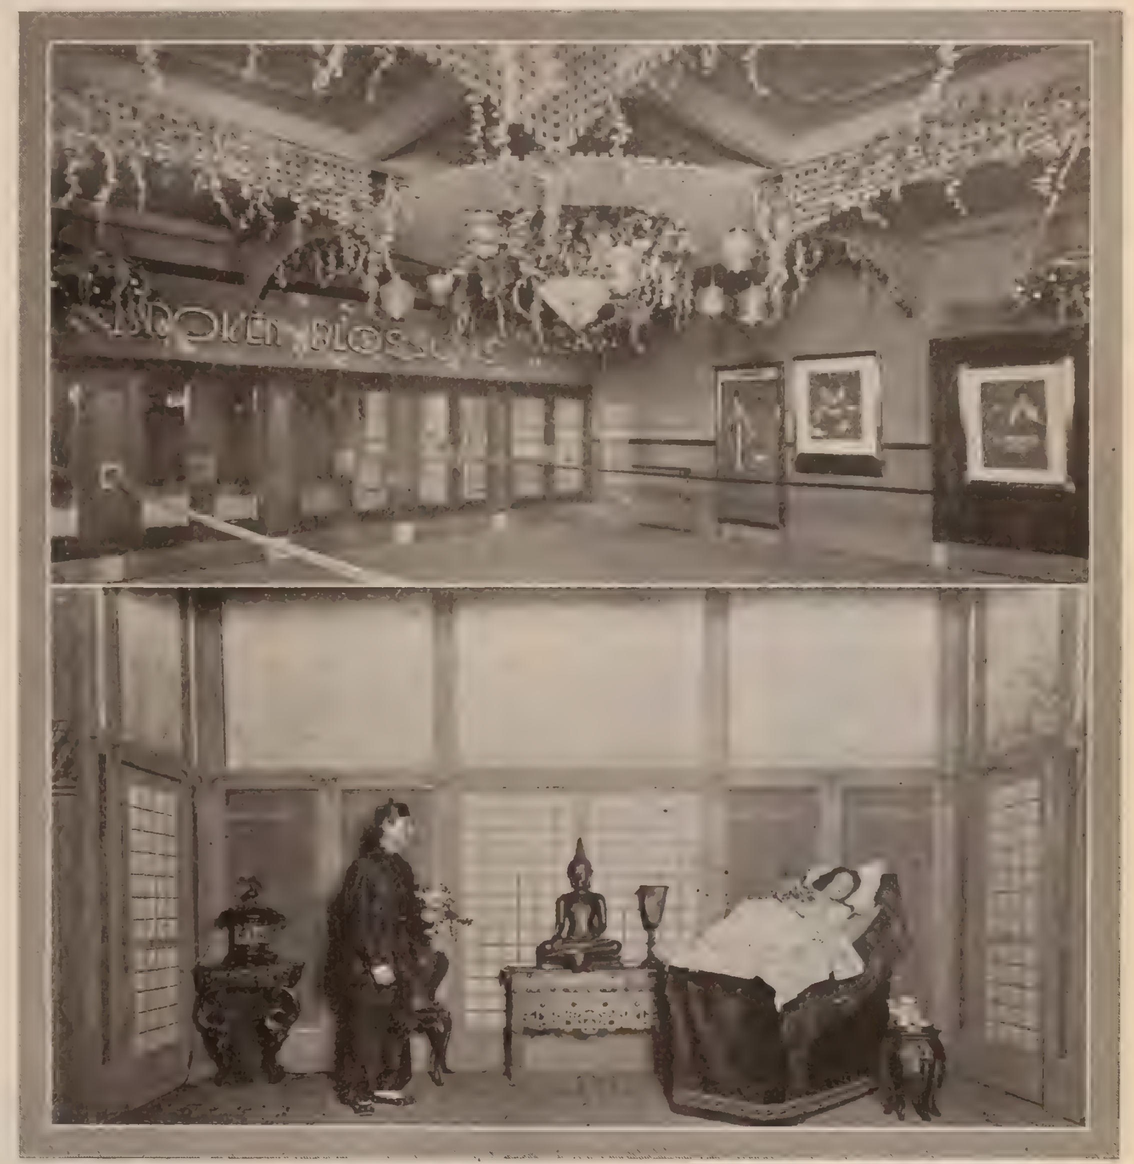
MAKING new patrons for his theatre, through the medium of an attractive exploitation campaign, in which the dress of his house played a most prominent part, was what Manager A. E. Abelson, of the New Lyric Theatre, of Minneapolis, Minn., did in connection with the run of D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" at his house a short while past.

"When I booked this production," said Mr. Abelson, "I realized full well that here was an opportunity of extending myself to the limit, and exploiting the production in a way that was unusual for this section of the country. My sole idea was to attract an additional clientele, and believed that this was the picture to do it with. It was just the sort of production that gave one the opportunity of demonstrating to these people that motion picture entertainment had come into its own and that no one need longer look upon films as unworthy of the highest standards of dramatic art."

With this in mind, Mr. Abelson started with the "show windows of my theatre," his exterior and lobby. A special artist in the town made a number of special one sheets in wonderfully attractive Japanese colorings for the front of his house, announcing on them this thought that "the high art of the screen must remain as a closed book to those who do not see and know D. W. Griffith's art sensation, "Broken Blossoms." These exceptional cards attracted no end of attention from the thousands who passed by, attracted them in such a manner that they looked inside.

The lobby was a thing of beauty. The original decorations of the walls of the theatre were of such hues that the addition of decorations symbolical of the picture were exceptional in their blending. Surrounding the chandelier, lattice work was arranged with connecting portions that covered the entire lobby, about which in artistic profusion were hung Japanese lanterns, which during the darker hours of the day and evening, were lighted with different colored lights, casting a delightful glow about the lobby. All of the lattice work was interwound with wisteria and blossoms of all colors, giving the whole an exceedingly attractive appearance.

Immediately inside the lobby, the foyer of the theatre was similarly decorated. It was there that the thousands of patrons were greeted by the ushers, all dressed in the height of Japanese fashion. The interior of the theatre was draped with broken blossoms and wisteria and between performances incense was burned.



View of the lobby of the New Lyric theatre dressed for the "Broken Blossoms" engagement and of the prologue staged before the picture was screened

Prior to the showing of the picture the management had arranged a prologue, similar to the finish ofthe picture, picturing the "chink" doing homage to the girl whom he had grown to adore. The prologue was the same as that used in the Griffith presentation in New York which had been issued to all exhibitors by the distributers.

The fact that this sort of exploitation was appreciated by the public was demonstrated by the exceptional business that the theatre did with the production during its entire run at the New Lyric Theatre, and Mr. Abelson is convinced that such handling of big features is indeed an excellent manner to attract new and additional patrons to his theatre.

Chief among all the facts in this case is that his entire campaign was keyed up to attract those who never were in his theatre before, so he keyed everything up to the utmost class, refinement, dignity and art, in other words he used nothing that bordered on circus or ballyhoo methods. His advertising in the newspapers was of a particularly attractive style, using plenty of space in which there was sufficient white space to make his ads stand out far above the others on the same pages. His campaign was a bigger one than he had ever instituted on previous occasions, and his receipts were in proportion. His every effort reflected the artistry and beauty of the film itself and its results, he believed, will have a very lasting effect.

The Effectiveness of the Cut-Out

THE effectiveness of the cutout properly retouched and given a contrasting background has been so pronounced in the estimation of Edwin O. Weinberg, manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., that a number of artists are employed by this theatre for the especial purpose of arranging what Mr. Weinberg terms "lobby exploitation."

A natural advantage of the Strand makes it possible to place a large mounted cutout in a frame over the entrance to the Strand, where it can be seen by street crowds. Two other frames on each side of the lobby are used for cutout arrangements.

In the exploitation of "Heart O' the Hills," Mary Pickford's latest First National attraction, a large figure of Mary Pickford was placed in the panel over the entrance, a cutout depicting her sliding down the coal chute adorned one lobby sideframe, and the other showed Miss Pickford mounted on a donkey.

The careful attention given to lobby displays and especially the cutouts has resulted in drawing considerable local interest to the attractions presented at the Strand.

Exploitation Men's Minute Book

A Tie-Up with the "Leather Necks"

CLAYTON B. VOGEL, officer in charge of Marine recruiting in Philadelphia, is a soldier who uses his head for something beside a place to hang his hat. Mr. Vogel conceived the idea that he could use Elsie Janis, who was appearing in "A Regular Girl," to good advantage in boosting recruiting for the Marine Service.

He sought the cooperation of L. A. Young, manager of Select's branch office in Philadelphia, and readily got it. Obtaining a large motor truck, Mr. Vogel placed on the sides and back large signs with a picture of Miss Janis. On the signs he had printed:

"Elsie Janis Is a Regular Girl"
"The Marine Corps Is a Regular Outfit"
"If You Are a Regular Fellow Join Us and See Service on Land, Sea and Sky"

View of the Capitol theatre, Philadelphia, showing Sergeant Crawley and his attractive sign advertising Uncle Sam and "A Regular Girl"

"See Elsie Janis at Capitol Theatre, 722 Market Street, Week of January 12"
"See United States Marine Corps, 1409 Arch Street, ANYTIME"

Mr. Vogel paraded this truck every day all over the city during the run of the regular girl and it attracted a lot of attention and brought business to both the marines and the theatre. But Vogel went a step further. In front of the Capitol theatre he placed a sign reading:

"Elsie Janis, a Regular Girl.
"She Says
"Join the Marines
"Cause Its
"A Regular Outfit.
"You Can Join Up for 2, 3 or 4 Years"

This is the first time that the Marines have permitted their posters to be used for advertising other than for their own service. That it was successful is attested by the following letter written by Mr. Vogel to Mr. Young:

"It has been my privilege to cooperate with you in advertising the Elsie Janis photoplay, "A Regular Girl," here in Philadelphia, by placing your signs on the Marine Corps camouflage truck, on which signs you have given the Marine Corps a good share of the advertisement, which I hope will be of use to us both.

"I am contemplating sending the truck to Wilkesbarre, Pa., on Jan. 19, where it will remain until Jan. 24, on which day it will return to Philadelphia. The week of Jan. 26-31 the truck will be in the vicinity of Wilmington, Del. The week of Feb. 2-7 it will be in the vicinity of Lancaster, Pa.

"EXPLOITATION MEN'S MINUTE BOOK—"

GIVING Credit Where Credit Is Due. The text of the pages under this heading is devoted exclusively to the achievements of the Exchange Exploitation Men.

It places at the disposal of the exhibitor all the exploitation ideas these experts originate, renders their services practically universal and gives credit where credit is due.

"If it is your desire to cooperate with me in the above territory I will be very glad to carry your signs on the truck, as it will undoubtedly give both of us good advertisement. Your signs are excellent. It should be noted that this schedule will advertise in Wilkesbarre the week before the photoplay is shown there; in Lancaster three days before being shown and during the time it is being shown, and in Wilmington the week during which the film is being shown."

The idea worked out so successfully that Mr. Vogel urged Mr. Young to furnish all of the recruiting officers in the country with the release dates of "A Regular Girl" in their section, and suggested he get in touch with them and ask them to cooperate as had been done in Philadelphia.

"Mystery Girl" Used for "Upstairs" Exploitation

ANOTHER campaign put over with marked success by C. C. Deardourff, Goldwyn press and service representative at the Cleveland exchange, came in connection with the exploitation of Mabel Normand in "Upstairs" at the Marion Theatre, Marion, Ohio, which is under the management of G. H. Foster. He used the "Masked Mystery Girl" stunt to such good purpose that two stories with illustration landed on the front page of the Marion, Ohio, Tribune, whereas on other days, good space was secured on the inside pages. Mr. Deardourff's success in planting the stories was particularly noteworthy, in view of the conservative policy of the Ohio Tribune.

The young woman used in connection with the stunt was much in evidence on the streets of Marion and at the town's leading hotel. She always wore a mask and of course succeeded in getting herself interviewed by reporters. But the purpose of her visit remained a mystery until the day before the showing of the picture when she admitted that she was employed at Goldwyn's Culver City Studios and that she was helping to exploit Mabel Normand in her comedy "Upstairs."

On the first day of the three-day engagement, the Ohio Republican carried a page of advertisements secured from the local merchants and tied-up with the picture, billed as the "Ragtime Romance Photoplay with the Cyclonic Comedienne, Mabel Normand."

Competition being the life of trade should be changed to co-operation, etc.

Efficiency builds a fence at the top of a precipice instead of constructing a hospital at the bottom.

Brilliancy is a word of many meanings, few of which are applicable to the average man. Therefore most of us must hope to succeed only by honest effort.

The Sphinx says that to rest is to rust.

F. P.-Lasky Foreign Report Given by Film

An interesting insight into foreign film conditons is presented in a special film prepared by Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This film, which depicted offices and distributing agencies of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in foreign lands, served as the annual report made by Mr. Shauer to the stockholders and directors of the company. It is said to be the first time that an officer's report had been made in this form.

Outstanding features of the report for the year were the signing of a contract with the Danish-American Film Company, Ltd., for the distribution of Paramount Artcraft productions in Germany, Poland, Austria, Hungary, Rumania, Jugo-Slavia, Bulgaria and Czecho-Slovakia, and the founding of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., for the production of Paramount Artcraft pictures in Great Britain and Europe.

More than 50,000,000 feet of film were shipped abroad by the foreign department without the loss of a single foot of film, a remarkable record considering the operations of the German submarines throughout the War.

E. Saunders to Inspect Mid-West Exchanges

For the purpose of intensifying the sales drive on the second and third rounds of Metro's "fewer and better" pictures, E. M. Saunders, general sales manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, will start in a few days on a swing around the circle of the company's Middle West exchanges. Mr. Saunders expects to be away for two or three weeks.

Metro further announces that B. F. Rosenberg has gone from the Salt Lake City exchange to assume the management of the Denver office. Management of the Salt Lake branch has been entrusted to G. L. Gloward.

"The Fear Market," Alice Brady's first production for Realart, will be the feature at the Rivoli this week.

As the fifth release of the young producing company, this film will also be the fifth Realart production to show on the White Way, every one of the concern's pictures having received Broadway recognition—some of them more than once.

This is the first screen work of Miss Brady in several months and the response to her initial Realart production is expected to be unusual, due to the combination of her stage and screen popularity.

Burr Forms Master Films, Inc.

Rights to "Torchy" Series by Sewell Ford Acquired for Screen Production

THE formation of a new producing company entitled Master Films, Inc., is announced by Charles C. Burr, its President and General Manager. This new unit has secured picture rights to many short stories of popular magazine fiction which have appeared in various well-known weekly and monthly publications.

When seen, Mr. Burr said: "We have purchased the rights to all of the well known Torchy stories. Torchy, as you know, is the fiery headed general grouch dispeller, the official little ray of sunshine created by Sewell Ford.

"These stories have been running for a number of years in the Sunday magazines and Sunday editions of the leading American Newspapers.

"As fast as each series has been completed, they have been put into book form. The first of these was "Torchy" followed in rapid succession by "Trying Out Torchy", "On With Torchy", "Torchy, Private Sec.", "Wilt Thou Torchy"?, "The House of Torchy", and the newest one which has just been reviewed in the New York Times, January 18th, is entitled "Torchy and Vee".

"We have been more than fortunate in securing Johnny Hines, the irrepressible, who fits into the character of Torchy as if it were built for him. Mr. Hines has just been starring at the Cort Theatre in the Musical Comedy, "Just a Minute", through the courtesy of Master Films, Inc.

"These pictures are going to have settings, direction and cast worthy of the highest class features on the market today. Neither effort nor money will be spared to reproduce on the screen. the visualization of Sewell Ford's most lovable character".

The office of Master Films, Inc., is 1214 Aeolian Building, Charles C. Burr is President and General Manager and E. J. Clode, Vice-President.

"The Christian" Goldwyn's

Picture Rights to Famous Hall Caine Story Acquired; Big Plans Under Way

GOLDWYN Pictures Corporation has purchased the picture rights to Hall Caine's "The Christian." Goldwyn plans to make the film version of Hall Caine's powerful drama one of the greatest photoplays ever screened, it is said. No story written in this generation possesses to a fuller degree all of the essentials for heart-stirring action, and every resource of Goldwyn's vast organization will be at the disposal of the director and players selected for the interpretation, announce Goldwyn officials.

T. Hayes Hunter, responsible for "The Cup of Fury," Goldwyn release

The records of publishers and librarians, in England as in this country, show that "The Christian," for more than twenty years, has been one of the most widely read books in the English language. Shortly after the story had become established as a literary sensation, it was made into a play which scored a phenomenal success in London and New York. Presented by the Lieblers at the Knickerbocker theatre, October 10, 1898, it was heralded as being among the most important dramas of many seasons, and the public flocked tc the theatre during one of the longest runs in the annals of Broadway.

In bringing this drama again to the screen, Goldwyn is carrying out a policy of producing the classics of the stage, as well as the current writings of authors whose names signify high accomplishment in modern literature. "Madame X," "Milestones" and "The Christian," to mention only three of the many recent purchases by this company, are a fair indication of the importance of the plays Goldwyn is planning to produce.

Arrow Head on Coast Makes Many Plans

Doctor W. E. Shallenberger, head of the Arrow Film Corporation, who has been in Los Angeles during the past week following a trip to various exchange centers of the country, has been extremely busy in making arrangements for future productions for the open market.

Doctor Shallenberger has made several contracts which will provide several series of pictures for the open market including features as well as one and two-reel comedies and short melodramas.

"Conditions for open market were never better," Doctor Shallenberger told the News representative, "and I anticipate the independent exchangmen will, during the year 1920, have exceptionally good business, and one that will eclipse any previous years. In Los Angeles I find producing conditions for the open market decidedly pleasing, and upon my return east I will be in a position to make promises to the independent exchange man that I know will prove gratifying."

Hugh Ford to Make a Special in West

Hugh Ford, who has been working day and night to finish cutting his last Elsie Ferguson picture, "Lady Rose's Daughter," has gone West to make a special production at the Lasky studio.

There will be no star in this production but one of the most important casts ever assembled for a special picture.

The name under which this picture will be released has not yet been definitely selected, and it is thought wise even to withhold the nature of the story for the present.

"Huckleberry Finn" Has Two Big Openings

The hold which "Huckleberry Finn" has upon the American people was amply demonstrated last week says Famous Players-Lasky, when William D. Taylor's Paramount Artcraft production of the Mark Twain story was shown simultaneously at the Sherman Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio, and the Loring Theatre, Riverside, California, for the first time in the United States.

H. P. Wolfberg, Famous Players-Lasky's branch manager at Cincinnati, wired the home office as follows:

"'Huckleberry Finn' completed three-day engagement at Chillicothe with complete success. Receipts went over those for 'The Miracle Man' for four days. All records smashed."

The following telegram came from Al Price, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representative in Los Angeles:

"'Huckleberry Finn' absolutely breaks all box-office records at Loring Theatre, Riverside, on first day of showing."

Cast for "Dad's Girl"

Republic Distributing Corporation this week announced the complete cast of "Dad's Girl," which was named last week as the first of a series to be distributed through Republic by Waldorf Photoplays, Ltd.

Cast for "The Mad Talon"

Pathe Announces Members of Support for Juanita Hansen in Coming Serial

THE cast of principals announced this week by casting director William P. Burt of George B. Seitz, Inc., to support Juanita Hansen in her forthcoming Pathe serial, "The Mad Talon", contains, Pathe states, some of the most prominent actors on the screen. Under Mr. Seitz' personal supervision, this serial is being produced at his studio in New York.

The leading heavy role has been assigned to Warner Oland. He played the heavy in "The Fatal Ring" and "The Lightning Raider" with Pearl White, and in "Patria" with Irene Castle. He has appeared in a number of features opposite Elsie Ferguson and has just completed work in the Louis J. Gasnier Pathe serial, "The Third Eye", in which he is co-starred with Eileen Percy.

The mystery character is to be played by Major Wallace McCutcheon who made such a hit in the role of "Frederic Vaux" in Pearl White's latest Pathe serial "The Black Secret". Major McCutcheon has had a long career on both stage and screen.

William N. Bailey has been cast in the leading male role. His work is well known, and he has appeared in a number of Essanay, Mutual, World, Universal, Metro, Wharton, Fox and Blackton pictures.

Real work on "The Mad Talon", which was written by Mr. Seitz, will begin this week. The principals, with the exception of Mr. Oland have all reported and the script outlined to them. Miss Hansen will begin on Monday, January 19.

Mr. Seitz will attempt the unusual task of finishing work on "Pirate Gold", the second Pathe serial of which he is star and director, and at the same time begin the direction of Miss Hansen in "The Mad Talon".

Clemenceau Sees Film Work

Print of "The Strongest" Titled in French, Rushed Over Ocean by Fox

TITLED in French, ready to be shown to the man who conceived it, a special print of "The Strongest" is speeding across the Atlantic on the French liner La France. It will be shown to Georges Clemenceau and a party of his closest friends at the spacious projection room of Fox Film Corporation, 24 Boulevard des Italiens, Paris.

After the "Tiger of France" has approved it, the one and only photodrama by the late Premier—the man with the international mind—will be shown to the French Senators and deputies at a special showing, and it is likely that the newly elected president of the French republic, Paul Deschaniel, also will view it at this showing.

Georges Clemenceau did more than write "The Strongest." There is a cast of international players interpreting on the screen the powerful and virile characters that carry the message of the great story into the farthermost corners of the world through the distribution agencies of Fox Film Corporation.

Renee Adoree, to Paris, "Renee the Adorex", is the heroine of the Clemenceau romance and Carlo Liteu has a leading male part.

Florence Malone, Hal Horne, James Marcus and C. A. de Lima give excellent interpretations of the characters assigned to them. Ben Bail has photographed the picture with great skill, and the lighting effects are excellent.

R. A. Walsh is said to have never done better work than on the film version of Clemenceau's only novel. Taken as a whole, the production, says Fox, should be one of the greatest screen stories ever told. It has in it a universal appeal that will carry a message to the people of every land—a message which in its moral lesson is clear and convincing.

Frisco Men Want to Buy Into Sennett Comedy

It is no news to followers, intimate or distant, of the motion picture industry, to be told that capital is interesting itself more and more in the chances for profitable investment held out by the popularity of motion pictures; but it is interesting to note particular expressions of that expanding interest. Abe Friedman, a member of the Friedman Furniture Company, the largest in San Francisco, has been in Los Angeles for more than a week representing a coterie of San Francisco business men, converts to the motion picture industry as a medium of legitimate investment. Mr. Friedman has offered E. M. Asher, personal representative of Mack Sennett, $250,000 for a one-half interest in Mr. Sennett's "Down on the Farm," a five-reel super-production which has just been completed at the Sennett Studio. Mr. Sennett has the offer under advisement.

Zeidman Enthuses Over New Offering

Bennie Zeidman, vice president of the Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Co., telegraphing the home office from Los Angeles, after viewing the completed Mildred Harris Chaplin picture, "Polly of the Storm Country," said: "I am not given to raving, but am absolutely convinced that this Mayer-made First National attraction is one of the most telling blows the screen has ever dealt at social caste. It is a picture so jammed full of heart interest that it cannot fail to impress."

"Polly of the Storm Country" will be the first Mildred Harris Chaplin release as a First National attraction under the banner of Louis B. Mayer. Originally it was planned to release "The Inferior Sex" as number one, but an accident damaged the negative to such an extent that it was found impossible to retake the scenes in time to meet the release date.

Author Will Assist in Cutting and Editing

Mary Roberts Rinehart has jumped from Pittsburg to Los Angeles to be present at the editing and cutting of her first picture for Eminent Authors made from her latest popular book, "Dangerous Days." The Goldwyn studio people are very much elated over the production Reginald Barker has made for "Dangerous Days" and say that he has surpassed his previous efforts.

Parisian Fashion Frolic Plays Moss Circuit

The Parisian Fashion Frolic which will end a ten week engagement at the Broadway theatre on Saturday night, will play the Hamilton theatre for the entire week of January 19th, according to an announcement from the Moss offices.

Following the Hamilton, the Frolic will open at the Regent theatre for one week and will then go to the Jefferson theatre.

Rachel Crothers' famous stage play "Old Lady 31" is to be made into a picture by Screen Classics, Inc., for Metro release. Emma Dunn, famous for her "mother" roles will have the leading part

"Old Lady 31," a Theme of Contrasted Love

The theme of "Old Lady 31" is, as one critic remarked, that "grandmothers and grandfathers are just the same as other people, only older." The introduction of the juvenile lovers in the persons of Antrim Short and Winifred Westover is in gentle contrast to the romance of the old couple, played on the screen—as on the stage—by Emma Dunn and Harry Harmon.

Children Series to Be Made for Prizma Company

Director Frederick Thompson has come to Hollywood to make a series of pictures, featuring children for the Prizma Company. Vitagraph Secures New James Curwood Story

Vitagraph has secured the motion-picture rights to "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," James Oliver Curwood's story of the Canadian Northwest. It will be made as a special production at the West Coast studio with a special cast, according to Vitagraph. David Smith, who directed Bessie Love's Vitagraph features, will be the director. This will be the tenth of the Curwood novels to be produced by Vitagraph in motion-picture form.

Pat Dowling, director of advertising and publicity for Christie pictures, will shortly leave Los Angeles for a tour of the important exchange centers between the West Coast and New York, including stops at Denver, Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Boston and other large cities, for the purpose of seeing how Christie Comedies are presented in the leading theatres of the country.

Hiller To Start Great Campaign

To Put Over "Who's Your Servant?" With Big Push

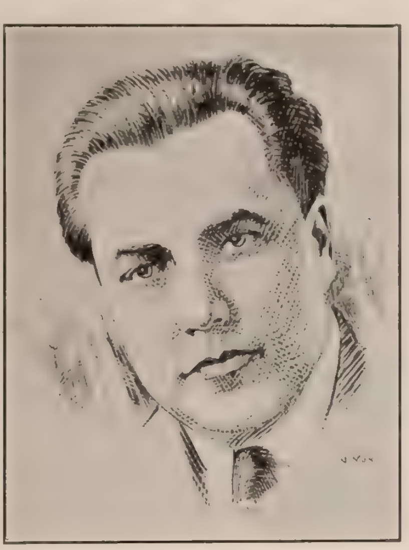
WIDE exploitation, advertising and publicity will be used to boost "Who's Your Servant?" the photodrama written by Julian Johnson.

L. L. Hiller who controls the world rights to the first independent picture of the new year declares that a staff of experts will revolutionize the methods used to exploit a picture and that when the production is ready for the public, one of the biggest national advertising campaigns will result in having "Who's our Servant?" the by word in every home in the United States.

Men have been at work for the past three weeks preparing a sixteen page campaign book. This book will be in four colors and will contain more than one hundred hints as to how to put "Who's Your Servant?" over in big time style. Each and every help for the exhibitor has been compiled after careful thought as to the practicability of carrying the plan to a successful ending. Showmanship is the by-word of this book.

So that the exhibitor cannot go wrong in exploiting this photodrama, this campaign book is illustrated by some of the best known artists in the country. Special attention has been given to outdoor advertising, lobby displays and co-operative plan sheet.

Advertising suitable for a full page display to a teaser campaign reaching into the homes is to be found in this illustrated booklet. A mailing campaign noted for its uniqueness is one of the many sidelights of this great campaign aid.



Julian Johnson

In addition to the sixteen page exploitation book, there will be issued another publicity help consisting of sixteen pages of up-to-the-minute news of the picture, many cuts adapted for one, two or three columns of regulation newspaper screen are reproduced. This is said to be the most comprehensive press book ever issued with a picture. So that the data is ready for the printer, Mr. Hiller has arranged to have the sheets printed on but one side.

"When I consummated the deal for the world rights to this picture, I was asked to release it at once," said Mr. Hiller, "Realizing the worth of the production, I decided to hold it until the greatest advertising exploitation and publicity campaign ever launched would be a reality. The picture is now ready but it will be several weeks at least before the print will be given to the public for I want the campaign to be in keeping with the production.

"In addition to the publicity, exploitation and advertising booklets, there will be more than twenty-five accessories ready for the exhibitor. Before I planned this campaign, I saw to it that I employed showmen who know how to exploit to arrange ideas for this picture. The books are practical and I predict will revolutionize this form of salesmanship to the fan."

The settings of the picture afforded ample material for the posters. One twenty-four sheet, a six-sheet and two styles of three and one sheets will be distributed. For the lobby showing two sets of 22x28 and the 11x24 will be about the most beautiful money and time can reproduce.

In addition to the above helps, there are two four-column, two three-column, two two-column and three one-column advertising cuts and mats and six scene cuts divided between the one and two-column size.

Pathe Head Pleased by Outlook

Paul Brunet Back from Coast Enthusiastic Over Prospects

MR. PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is back from a brief visit to the Pacific Coast, enthusiastic over the gratifying success of his mission and especially pleased over the work in preparation and that planned for the immediate future of the ten producing units included in the Pathe releases. Mr. Brunet, accompanied by Mrs. Brunet, left New York on December 27th, and journeyed direct to the coast.

Mr. Brunet completed the establishment of permanent Pathe headquarters on the coast, which will begin operation on February 1st, and be located in the Wright-Calendar Building. Mr. Gilson Willets, formerly manager of the Pathe scenario department, is now the permanent Pacific coast production representative and the publicity will be handled by Mrs. Phyllis Daniels, who has an established reputation in her line of work. Production will be handled from there, and all producing heads will have daily conferences over the work in progress. Mr. Brunet finds that this arrangement will greatly facilitate the movement of the story to the screen and accomplish a most valuable saving in time.

One of the principal projects that engaged the attention of Mr. Brunet was the Associated Exhibitors, Inc.; but beyond stating that all of his objects in this particular had been accomplished, the Pathe chief added that the full details would be announced later.

"The plan of operation of the Associated Exhibitors," commented Mr. Brunet, "has features that are not included in any of the similar combinations and has been warmly endorced from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"The production units really leave nothing to be desired—ten in all, including Edgar Lewis, producing a class of pictures that have made him famous; the Blanche Sweet Specials, produced by Jesse D. Hampton, the two-reel $100,000 Lloyd comedies produced by Hal E. Roach; Ruth Roland Serials; H. B. Warner Specials, produced by Jesse D. Hampton; the Jack Dempsey serial produced by Robert Brunton; the Frank Keenan Specials; Louis J. Gasnier Serials; the specials produced by Edwin Carewe and the one-reel Rolin comedies from Hal E. Roach.

"Work is progressing smoothly, and the high class of story, careful casting and expert direction are responsible for some wonderfully effective work. Edgar Lewis was in the final stages of George Barr McCutcheon's popular story on 'Sherry.' It will be a fit companion to his first big Pathe picture 'Other Men's Shoes.'

"At the Jesse D. Hampton Productions, with Blanche Sweet as the star, they were just putting the finishing touches on 'The Deadlier Sex,' by Bayard Veiller, whose 'Thirteenth Chair,' released by Pathe, is still active in making a new record.

"Hal. E. Roach declares that the warm reception accorded the Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies all over the country justifies his judgment in making the liberal expenditure in the setting and dressing of these features.

"So it is that in the production of these Lloyd features and in the one-reel Rolin comedies featuring 'Snub' Pollard, Mr. Roach has outgrown his old studio. Within two weeks he will move into a roomy modern studio, well equipped with all of the up-to-date improvements, which has been erected at a cost of $100,000 at Culver City."

Much Work to Be Done on the Leonard Serial; Program for Future Announced

FOLLOWING the recent announcement by Hallmark that Wally Van would supervise Frank G. Hall's next serial in which Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, will have the star role, it is now announced that actual production started this week at the 38th Street Studio.

In discussing the forthcoming serial, Mr. Van said:

"The supervision of the Benny Leonard production means more than the usual routine of selecting the cast of players and directing them and looking after the production in general."

"The plans, as previously outlined, call for Leonard to appear in at least fifteen different cities between New York and San Francisco, each city visited to be the scene of one or more episodes in the serial."

"Arrangements will also have to be made with the Governors of the States and the Mayors of the Cities visited for some special features that will be injected into the serial."

"There are some very unique ideas to be incorporated in this production which I am not at liberty to discuss at this time."

"After completing the Benny Leonard production," Mr. Van announces, "I have plans under way to make six big comedy dramas on the Coast. The stories for three of these have already been bought and negotiations for three more are now pending. These pictures will be personally supervised by me and will really be big specials in the strictest sense of the word. They will all be in the $100,000 class."

While the posters are all made from especially drawn sketches the scenes are without exception taken from the picture itself, it is stated. Three different styles of one-sheets, two three sheets, one six-sheet, one 24 sheet, one style of window card, and one half-sheet comprise the styles of paper on "The Great Air Robbery."

Big Sets a Feature of "Oil"

Big sets are the order of the day at Paragon Studio, where Guy Empey is filming the concluding scenes in his special production "Oil" prior to leaving with his company for work on location, which departure is now less than a week distant. A great many of the scenes in "Oil" are laid in a large hotel in a middle western city and the week passed has seen a growth in the Paragon Studio of an elaborate restaurant and grill room set and the last few days of a mammoth set representing a hotel lobby and the reception-room leading from it.

This set occupies the entire length of the large Paragon Studio and in some places extends as well through its entire width The set is a fine example of the artistry of technical Director Herbert Messmore who is permanently attached to the Empey organization. The studio equivalent of black marble and green and yellow onyx is lavishly used in a structure so substantial that its appearance on the screen will leave no doubt in the minds of the audience of its being other than the interior of a real hotel.

"Live Sparks" in Pre-Release Showing

Rowland and Clark's first-run house in Pittsburgh, the Regent, opened a pre-release presentation of "Live Sparks" on Sunday to a capacity house, it is said, an engagement which will be followed during the month by six other Pittsburgh houses in the Roland and Clairk chain. Goldwyn Has Animated Cartoon in Colors

The three subjects in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7023, to be released February 8th, are of such interest that they deserve special notice. For what is said to be the first time in the history of motion pictures, exhibitors will receive an animated cartoon in colors. Then there is a microscopic study of "Dew Fall", under the general title of "Marvels of the Universe", and finally one of the "Master Minds of America" series having Gutzon Borglum as its subject.

As a nature study the screen has brought nothing more interesting and scientifically valuable than the microscopic analysis of dew and frost. Subtitles are arranged to give continuity to the picture and unfold a whimsical little story.

The study of Gutzon Borglum is said to be a fitting contribution to the Americanization propaganda on the screen advanced by Secretary Lane and other advocates of militant patriotism. Borglum is represented as the type of American that the country welcomes as a great force for progress.

"The Luck of the Irish" Gets Fine Reception

"The Luck of the Irish," Allan Dwan's new picture romance slipped quietly into Grauman's Broadway theatre in Los Angeles for its first showing, and solely on its own merits and without advance exploitation, it has literally smashed across a screen victory in its pre-release showing, announces Realart Pictures Corporation.

Sid Grauman, in hailing the Realart feature as a "triumph for the cinema art," was backed by reviewers of the Western city, and by audiences who packed the big house and caused the well-known exhibitor to say in a telegraphic message to John S. Woody: "I don't think any theatre in this country is big enough to hold them."

"The Beggar Prince" to Mark Another Success

After winning additional screen laurels in Robertson-Cole's release, "The Tong Man," Sessue Hayakawa steps from that dramatic role to a dual personage in his forthcoming production, "The Beggar Prince." Those who have seen it declare that his work by far surpasses his achievements attained in "The Tong Man" and openly declare that it will be a big box-office attraction.

"So overwhelmingly has been his success that Hayakawa's name is used in lights at almost every first run house in the United States," declares a recent report from the Robertson-Cole offices. "On account of this enviable record many of the best known exhibitors have contracted for every picture turned out by Hayakawa for Robertson-Cole."

"The Corsican Brothers," it is confidently expected, will prove one of the finest box office attractions United or any other releasing company has made available for exhibitors.

Recent Purchases of Goldwyn's

A George Ade and Henry Blossom Play and a Williams Story

AMONG the recent purchases effected by the Goldwyn Pictures are the transactions resulting in the acquisition of "The Slim Princess," a past success of the musical comedy stage, and "The Man Who Had Everything," an unpublished story of Ben Ames Williams.

"The Slim Princess," one of the most lastingly popular of all comedies with music, has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will receive a screen interpretation. Negotiations for the picture rights were closed last week and soon plans will be formulated for its production. Opportunities for a colorful, fanciful and humorous photoplay are said to abound in this production.

George Ade, America's master of satire, wrote the play in collaboration with Henry Blossom and it became a successful starring vehicle for Elsie Janis for several seasons, starting in the fall of 1910 under the management of Charles Dillingham. The play remained on Broadway for a full year before being taken to other large cities by the young star. After extended engagements in Chicago and Boston, "The Slim Princess" enjoyed a long career on the road during which practically every city and town of consequence was visited.

Miss Janis had a large following before the production of the Ade-Blossom play, but it is figured that "The Slim Princess" did more than any other one stage vehicle to enhance the reputation of the comedienne. It received a great amount of steady publicity through a period of years, a fact that will simplify the task of the exhibitor when he comes to exploiting the picture. The theatregoing public is well acquainted with the title, which stands for entertainment of the highest caliber.

Ben Ames Williams, whose stories are a prominent feature of the Saturday Evening Post, is becoming a regular contributor to the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation program. His "Jubilo," starring the inimitable Will Rogers, is one of the outstanding screen successes of the season; motion picture rights to "The Great Accident," serial publication of which was recently completed, have been secured by Goldwyn, and now comes the announcement of the purchase by the same company of another Williams story, as yet unpublished. It carries the attractive title of "The Man Who Had Everything."

When the manuscript of Mr. Williams' latest work was submitted to the Goldwyn readers, the picture possibilities offered in the plot appeared so exceptional, it is stated, that no time was lost in closing arrangements with the author for the screen production. This is one of the few times on record that the work of a famous writer has been secured by a picture producer in advance of its publication.

"The Man Who Had Everything" has a modern New York setting with the conflict arising between a millionaire financier and his son, who is famous along Broadway for his wild extravagances. Bullway, senior, is in despair of ever being able to do anything with his son, when a beggar, whom they almost run over in their automobile, makes a remark that proves to be an inspiration to the father. The beggar's curse is, "May you always have everything you want." The story is said to be replete with dramatic action and emotional clashes.

Neilan Against Injecting Ads

"Collecting at Both Ends" Subject of Statement; Will React on Producers

MARSHALL NEILAN last week issued a "call" to all motion picture producers and directors to attack the practice of injecting advertising in films and collecting at both ends, namely from the exhibitor and the national advertiser. Mr. Neilan in emphatic terms, denounced this method of "cutting down the over-head" on a picture and pointed out that it represented a serious handicap not only to the motion picture entertainment industry but to the individual producers and directors as well.

"The time has come," said Mr. Neilan, "when producers must realize that the practice of injecting advertising in entertainment film is a dangerous proceeding, not only for the industry in general, but for them individually.

"I know of specific cases where pictures have been practically paid for in advance by national advertisers after which high rentals were demanded and obtained from exhibitors for the privilege of making good the producer's arrangement with the advertiser. It behooves the individual director to stand firm on this matter, for its continuance means the prostitution of his own best efforts.

"Exhibitors have become 'wise' and the producers who do not realize this are only inviting trouble for themselves.

"The advertising possibilities of the screen are wonderful. However, this is a distinct field and should not be embodied in motion pictures prepared for entertainment purposes.

"Nothing is as unpopular with the American public as the realization that it is being 'fooled.' It is done every day in a hundred different ways, without a doubt, but as soon as the public is acquainted with the fact, resentment follows. This is human nature. The reaction upon the industry as a whole would not be insignificant. The direct result upon the producer responsible, and even the director whose name appears on the film, would be serious."

Brady and Warwick Reissues in Demand

In the Greater New York district the Alice Brady and Robert Warwick re-issues, which are distributed thru the Masterpiece Film Distributing Corp., 130 West 46 Street, have been booked by the Wm. Fox, Sidney Cohen, Bolodino, Meyer Weiss and Joseph Stern circuits, it is reported. The demand for these earlier Brady and Warwick subjects is said to be due to the discriminating choice made of the twenty-two Alice Brady pictures that she made for the World Film and of the eighteen World Robert Warwick subjects.

In addition to showing Alice Brady and Robert Warwick in these photoplays, these re-issues are offering fans an opportunity to see such producers as Capellani, Tourneur, Chautard, Crane and Knoles at work.

A Deluxe Sunshine Comic Coming

Five-Reeler Took Five Months in Making; Special Cast

THERE are said to be many remarkable things about the big special Sunshine Comedy just completed at the William Fox studios in Hollywood. One of these is the fact that this de luxe special took five months to make—total working time—and under conditions that are worthy of mention.

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of all Fox Sunshine Comedies, directed this special. Del Ruth's name has been associated with the production of screen mirth-makers for several seasons, and to him belongs the credit for having contributed many original and distinctive films in this branch of screen entertainment.

With announcement of the completion of this special Fox Sunshine comes the story of the making of what the producer claims is the most expensive comedy film ever put out. For a trifle more than five months Mr. Del Ruth has carried the megaphone continually, laid out special settings and designed many daring costumes for the players. Assisting Del Ruth was the entire Sunshine Comedy directorial staff, including Jack Blystone, Eddie Cline, Roy Del Ruth, Mal St. Claire, Vin Moore and Frank Griffin—each of them individually responsible for many successful Sunshine films and each an artist in the field of comic films.

This Fox comedy will be five reels in length. Plans for a big special campaign on it are now being formulated in the Advertising and Publicity Departments of Fox Film Corporation, and many novel stunts are promised for the exhibitor's aid in exploiting it.

The personnel of this special Sunshine de luxe includes every member of the Fox Sunshine Comedy forces, nearly two hundred players continually engaged in making the regular two-reel Sunshine film. Added to these in the five-reel production are several hundred extra people and many specialty acts.

The entire troupe of Singer Midgets, famous the world over as one of the most distinct novelties seen on the vaudeville circuits, was engaged by William Fox especially for this Sunshine de luxe. The Singer Midget troupe consists of nineteen tiny men and women, each a specialty artist in some branch of bright, clean entertainment. Several male members are phenomenal stunt and strong men.

Besides the Midgets themselves, Mr. Fox has secured the entire animal train of this troupe, as well as the complete special equipment carried by the Singer Company on its vaudeville tours.

Into the story of the film a genuine big-time circus is woven. In this circus Hampton Del Ruth has staged something which it is predicted will prove the sensation of the year. To make a long story short, the skilful director-in-chief has made this a real circus, from the sawdust to the pennanted big stick. He has freak actors who will bring back the good old days of the side show in your old home town. Some of the principals who enact the freak roles are well-known screen favorites and include Slim Somerville, Tom Kennedy, Mutt Murphy, Blanche Payson, Tiny Ward and Bert Gillespie; while there are others who are new to the screen.

In selecting a prima donna, around whom the "jazziferous" comedy revolves William Fox with much deliberation and many charming damsels under consideration, chose the dainty and demure Alta Allen. Miss Allen plays the unkissed bride in the big de luxe comedy and is heralded by the producer as the coming sensation in the film comedy field.

The regular corps of Sunshine beauties was increased by Mr. Del Ruth especially for this production. Seventy-five Sunshine Widows appear throughout the picture. If Mr. Del Ruth's word may be taken for it, they are everything that is fascinating.

The settings for the picture are claimed to be a new departure in comedy films. In this big five-reel special it has surpassed the beauty and originality of anything yet done in that branch of the producing field.

There are many massive settings, thousands of dollars' worth of costly furnishings, draperies, hangings and floor coverings. Nothing has been spared to make it a complete success so far as detail is concerned, and the cast is conceded to be an aggregation of the greatest artists in screen. It includes, besides Miss Allen, Chester Conklin, Harry Booker, Jack Cooper, Laura La Varnie, Ethel Teare, Alice Davenport, Glen Cavender, Bobbie Dunn, Ed Kennedy, Dave Morris, Jim Donnelly, Harry Gibbon and Dorothy Lee. Miss Lee is a charming beauty and leader of the Dashing Chorus of Sunshine Widows.

This Sunshine Special is the production on which William Fox gave the exhibitors of the country an opportunity to shine as title writers—for he published an offer of a $250 cash prize for the best title. The suggestions for titles are coming in thick and fast.

Another farce comedy favorite who forsaken slap stick for drama is Bebe D iels, who will appear in Cecil B. De Mil "Why Change Your Wife?" to be relea by Famous Players Lasky Corp.

Film To Spread Americanization

"The Copperhead" Is to Feature in Lincoln Day Celebration

ACTING upon the suggestion of Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, that the motion picture industry take immediate steps to spread, from Coast to Coast on Lincoln's Birthday, the story of America as best exemplified in the character and work of Abraham Lincoln, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is making a special drive for the showing of the Paramount Artcraft Super-Special, "The Copperhead," in as many theatres as possible on or near the 12th of February.

It was planned originally to release this picturization of Augustus Thomas's American play, in which Lionel Barrymore plays the leading role, somewhat later, but in view of the prominence of the character of Lincoln and its part in creating the strong patriotic appeal which the picture carries, the release was moved forward to January 25, so that by Lincoln's Birthday its message of Americanism would be permeating, either through actual showing of the picture or through anticipatory exploitation, every section of the country.

The national advertising campaign for "The Copperhead" is already under way, and by the time the anniversary of the birth of the Great Emancipator arrives, the full-page advertisement of the production will have appeared in practically all of thirty-one national publications, Famous-Players announces. Incorporated in this advertisement and displayed in a border alongside the illustration is a copy of the following resolution which was adopted last month by the Joint Committee on Education of the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

"Be it resolved, That it is the sense of the Joint Committee on Education of the United States Senate and House of Representatives that the motion picture industry of the United States be requested to do all that is within its power to upbuild and strengthen the spirit of Americanism within our people."

"The release of 'The Copperhead,'" said Adolph Zukor yesterday, "is the first tangible act of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in acceding to the request embodied in that resolution. When we first planned the production, months ago, we realized that the drama itself would be all-sufficient as mere dramatic entertainment. But we realized further that here was an opportunity offered us to spread far and wide the doctrine of pure Americanism—a doctrine which cannot be over-emphasized at this time when the spirit of Bolshevism seems to be more or less rampant."

"Desert Gold" Opens at the Brooklyn Strand

Backed with a powerful Edward L. Hyman campaign of exploitation, the opening of the Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn, Benj. B. Hampton's powerful Zane Grey's picture, "Desert Gold," opened to turn-away business at all performances.

Managing Director Jack Eaton of the Manhattan Strand devised a unique prelude to the Zane Grey picture last week. A picturesque little house on the desert, showing the clouds rolling by and illuminated by intermittent flashes of stars, was Mr. Eaton's novelty that won applause at every performance it is stated.

Views From the 5 reel Sunshine Comedy Special

Here is an advance hint of what may be seen in the heralded Sunshine Super-Comedy. The entire comedy directing force, under Hampton Del Ruth, lent a hand to the production.

All the Sunshine Beauties are in it—also the famed Singer Midgets and their trained animals. A "reg'lar" circus setting is promised in the advance notices from the Fox offices.

"Church and work," said Nat Duncan, a successful friend in "The Fortune Hunter," which Vitagraph is making into a super feature, with Earle Williams in the title role. This picture shows Mr. Williams doing the "church" part of his job

Williams Goes Back to Coast

Vitagraph Player, After Making Two Features in East, Returns to West

EARLE WILLIAMS will return to Vitagraph's West Coast studio on Feb. 1 to make the prologue scenes for "Capt. Swift," the famous drama by C. Hadden Chambers. These are laid in the bush country of Australia and it had been planned by Tom Terriss, who is directing Mr. Williams, to make the scenes on the waste and sandy shores of Long Island between Amagansett and Montauk Point. The action, however takes place during the torrid weather on the deserts and it was felt that justice could not be done to the scenes during the cold weather here and they will consequently be made in California. Mr. Terriss will not go West with Mr. Williams and the latter will direct the scenes himself, assisted by Chester Bennett.

Mr. Williams came here from the West Coast studio especially to appear in "The Fortune Hunter," Vitagraph's screen version of Winchell Smith's famous comedy, which has been completed and is nearing release. Since completing this feature Mr. Williams has been working on "Capt. Swift." It has been completed with the exception of the desert scenes, but the star will be held here until the first of next month awaiting railroad transportation, earlier accommodations not being available. Mr. Williams has planned to make three features during his stay in the East but much time was lost during the filming of "The Fortune Hunter" through the illness of not only of himself, but of Jean Paige, his leading lady, and other members of his supporting company.

Mr. Williams will not return to New York after completing "Capt. Swift" at the Western studio. His home is in Hollywood and he will continue his activities at the Vitagraph studio at that place.

Lauds "The Beloved Cheater"

Film Favorably Received in Detroit and Atlantic City; in Heavy Demand

FOLLOWING closely upon the announcement that "The Beloved Cheater," the Robertson-Cole special, starring Lew Cody, has been booked to play the Stanley theatre in Philadelphia, comes the announcement that the picture was the hit of Detroit and turned thousands away in Atlantic City. The criticisms of the press throughout the country are said to be more than favorable and in some instances it was said "the picture was a year ahead of the times."

"Figures do not lie and the numerous requests for extra bookings and the prices paid for the features, places 'The Beloved Cheater' in a class by itself," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, Vice-President and General Manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. "When playing against the best first-run production, the Lew Cody feature broke all records and so great was the demand that extra runs were made necessary.

"I have received more unsolicited praise for this picture than any other production ever affiliated with any organization to which I was attached. It is certainly marvelous the manner in which it has taken the country by storm. First-run houses in many cities bid for the picture where others were content to play day and date."

Pictures—As a Life Work

By SAMUEL E. MORRIS

Vice-Pres. and Gen. Mgr. Select Pictures

Sam. Morris, Vice-President and Genera Manager of Selznick Pictures

JUST what line of work to take up is the burning question with a huge army of young minds who are stepping out into the threshold of life.

Within the space of ten years from an insecure and inconspicuous position amongst the industries of the world, motion pictures have leaped with Brobdingnagian strides, until today it is securely established as the fifth largest industry in the world. In the ratio of its increase from a delicate infant to lusty youth, there has not been a similar increase in the mental caliber of the men and women who are connected with the business. For that reason, if no other, the motion picture business is offering today greater opportunities for quick advancement and proportionate financial returns than any other line.

The motion picture industry is crying for fresh minds who have been trained in colleges and universities to know how to think. Minds who have initiative and creative character; who have the power to apply themselves and concentrate until the objective point is reached. For such young men and women there is no limit to the heights they can attain and the riches that will come to them as a reward for their work.

Heretofore the motion picture business was conducted in a happy-go-lucky manner. None of the elements that are characteristic of a high-class commercial institution were in evidence. A change has taken place—a rapid transformation. Chaos is giving way to order. Executive heads realize the importance of having a house kept in an orderly, systematic manner. We are seeking here and there for the proper man or woman who can carry out the development work. The gros earnings of the motion picture industry in the world today is in exces of $50,000,000, or nearly twenty billion of dollars a year. This is sufficient i itself to show how important it is tha big minds are necessary to keep th big wheels moving. Such minds ca only be found amongst young men an women who have mentality capable o development. This process can only b brought about through the training received in educational institutions. Th motion picture industry is loudly calling for men and women who are willing to work, and work hard. Thos who have stick-to-it-iveness and individuality, creative ability and honesty—there is no limit to the amount o power and wealth that can be acquire in the business end of the motion picture industry."

Motion Picture in New Role

Thomas Ince Perfects Method Whereby Screen Will Aid Arrest of Criminals

THE evolution of criminal identification, and the part motion pictures will play in its perfection, is credited to Thomas H. Ince who, following months of experiment at the Ince Studios in Culver City, proposed the modern methods to police headquarters in Frisco.

Interviews with veteran members of the police and detective departments disclose the fact that identification by motion pictures will, without doubt, result in the capture of many notorious criminals, who have thus far succeeded in escaping those in pursuit. Officials point out that almost invariably a man is apprehended on account of some physical characteristic that is peculiar to him alone. A slight limp, the swing of the body as he walks, the poise of his head, his facial contortions while speaking and numerous individual habits and traits are relied upon mainly for capture.

While the Bertillon system of cranial and torsal measurement and still pictures are of definite aid in proving a man's identity after he has been captured, it is admitted that the Bertillon system and "stills" are, questionable value in seeking a suspec

Under the Thomas H. Ince syster modern methods will be employed transmitting facts relating to any fug tive. Within three hours after th police have learned the identity of th man wanted, his animated pictur may be projected on the screen every theatre in the community, ar several days later prints of the pi tures will be in the possession of P lice Headquarters in all cities f screening before the police and d tectives throughout the country an as needed, in foreign lands.

Big Campaign in Los Angeles

Extensive Program Arranged for the Appearance of "The Beloved Cheater"

"THE Beloved Cheater," the Robertson-Cole special starring Lew Cody, will go over in Los Angeles with great success if all of Robertson-Cole plans are realized. Special exploitation and publicity men have been sent to the Coast, and from the reports received by Robertson-Cole another method in real stunt exploitation will be put on record.

To head the program, plans have been made to have a special Sunday showing at which more than one thousand of the famous Los Angeles girls will attend the performance as guests of the management of the Symphony theatre. The heads of the department stores, millinery shops and modiste places, together with stores employing large number of girls will be supplied with more than a dozen of Lew Cody's Lexicon of Love books. These souvenirs will contain two passes for the Los Angeles premier of the Lew Cody special and will be given to the best looking girls in the various stores, according to the plans laid down.

The above feature is just one of a series employed to exploit "The Beloved Cheater." In addition, the management of the theatre has arranged with a singer of note to render "That Beloved Cheater of Mine," at all of the performances. This song hit was written as the aftermath to the big Robertson-Cole special.

Los Angeles will see one of the biggest teaser campaigns ever witnessed in behalf of a motion picture. The front pages of the newspapers are running readers asking questions to center attention on the attraction. The Woolworth Five and Ten Cent Stores in Los Angeles have window displays of the song and scenes and cards taken from the play, it is stated.

Plans Made for Pathe Star

Recent Successes of Blanche Sweet Leads to Bigger Plans for Future

THE success of Blanche Sweet in the recent releases of "A Woman of Pleasure" and "Fighting Cressy" and plans for the future vehicles of the star, "who has come back" after a temporary absence from the screen, are the subjects of a statement just issued by the Pathe Exchange, in which the announcement is made that "it has been decided to create for her a series of master-productions." The report follows

"It is the firm conviction of Pathe officials that in her two recent successes 'A Woman of Pleasure' and 'Fighting Cressy,' the drawing power of the star was so well established and her own work was of such genuine merit that she now ranks among the leading women stars of the year.

"For the first production of a star who has been temporarily away from the screen, 'A Woman of Pleasure' has achieved a most remarkable success. It will rank as one of the big money-getters of the season. When the second picture 'Fighting Cressy' was released and the same remarkable demand for the film became evident, it was realized that Blanche Sweet had returned to the screen to find herself in the very front row of women stars, and the plans for the future have been arranged accordingly.

"Early reports from Pathe Branch Managers and from exhibitors are coupled with queries as to the future Blanche Sweet specials and this is taken to mean that exhibitors see the tremendous star value of Miss Sweet and are anxious to take advantage of the record her pictures have been creating for her. This keen interest in the coming productions prompted a conference at which it was decided the star was worth unlimited support. The third picture of the series is 'The Deadlier Sex,' written by Bayard Veiller."

Catholic War Film Screened

Picture Showing Wartime Activities Seen at the Cohan and Harris House

MOST REV. PATRICK J. HAYES, D.D., Archbishop of New York, presided at the first public presentation in this city of "American Catholics in War and Reconstruction," the six-reel motion picture review of Catholic wartime activities which was prepared by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under the supervision of the National Catholic War Council and the Knights of Columbus special committees on war activities, when the picture was shown at the Cohan and Harris theatre, January 18.

Explanatory addresses were made by the Rev. John J. Burke, C.S.F., on behalf of the War Council's Committee on Special War Activities; William J. Mulligan, representing a similar committee of the Knights of Columbus, and Cornelius F. Collins of the Children's Court. The last named speaker outlined the citizenship campaign shortly to be inaugurated by means of motion pictures through the Catholic parishes of the country. The presiding officer was Justice Victor J. Dowling.

The evening marked an innovation, in that for the first time it introduced an animated report to the members of an organization. The picture consists of a series of exclusive and entertaining reviews of war work performed by the Knights of Columbus and other Catholic organizations.

Vitagraph Serial Titled "Vanishing Mask"

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has announced the selection of "The Vanishing Mask," as the title of the forthcoming Vitagraph serial in which Joe Ryan and Jean Paige will be cor-stars. Active work already has been begun on the serial at the West Coast studio at Hollywood, Cal., two episodes having been completed.

Like nearly all of the successful Vitagraph serials, "The Vanishing Mask" owes its inception to Mr. Smith. Cleveland Moffatt, author and playwright, was recently engaged by Mr. Smith and he is now conferring with the author and producer, embellishing many of the scenes and writing in additional thrills and surprises.

Mr. Ryan has a double role in the new serial—one that gives him an opportunity to appear as a villain, a characterization that has made him the best loved "bad man" on the screen, and the other as a "good" man, a new role for him.

This will be the first appearance for both Mr. Ryan and Miss Paige as stars.

Cast in Mildred Chaplin's Latest

A strong cast supports Mildred Harris Chaplin in her first Louis B. Mayer-First National production, "Polly of the Storm Country," which will be released within the next few weeks.

The production will mark the first appearance in America of the well known French actor, Valentin Maurice. Previous to the war Maurice was a popular French movie favorite.

Other members of the cast are Emery Johnson, who has played leads opposite Mary Pickford, Dorothy Dalton, Ethel Clayton and May Allison; Fred Kohler, who made a hit in "Soldiers of Fortune;" Ruby Lafayette, who had a role in "The Miracle Man;" Harry Northrup, seen several times in support of Douglas Fairbanks; Charles West, well remembered for his heavy with Mary Pickford, and little, though important Micky Moore, Charlotte Burton, Cora Drew, Cameron Coffey and Dick Rosson just about complete this well chosen cast.

The production was directed by Arthur Rosson

May Allison to Star in Past Stage Success

May Allison will play the part originated by Grace George in "The Marriage of William Asche," the screen rights to which have been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation. The story was written by Mrs. Humphrey Ward. Margaret Mayo dramatized it. The play version opened at the Garrick Theatre in 1905 with Miss George as the willful child-wife, Lady Kitty.

Story Bought for Marjorie Rambeau

Harry Cahane has bought for Marjorie Rambeau the motion picture rights to "The Shulamite," a South African story by Askew and Carry, which was dramatized and produced as a play in London and New York.

Selznick Aiming for Leadership

Extensive Plans for the Year Are Announced

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, President of Selznick Pictures Corporation, announces extensive plans for the present year, in which the organization he heads will surpass anything it has before attempted, so that by the first of next year it expects to take the lead in covering the motion picture field.

The major portion of Selznick pictures will be produced at the Fort Lee and Bronx studios until the big studio in Long Island City is completed.

Beginning shortly and continuing throughout the year, Ralph Ince will make special Ralph Ince Pictures, which he will direct and take part in. The first of these is "The Law Bringers," by G. V. Lancaster, which will be made in Saskatchawan, Canada.

Ince will also make a series of Americanization Pictures, at the suggestion of Secretary Lane, the first of which is a story of Lincoln called "Opportunity," written by Lewis Allen Browne. There will be a number of these stories.

The Selznick stars will be presented in stories especially selected for them and adapted to their individual styles. Olive Thomas, who is now working on "Glorious Youth," by John Lynch, Selznick's scenario editor, will next appear in "Jenny," by Roy Horniman. "Pretty Thing" and "Red Pepper" are also two pictures announced for Miss Thomas during the first half of the year. Other pictures being considered for her are "The Girl With the Faun's Ear," by Phylis Dugan, "False Pride" and "The Magdalen of Mudville."

Eugene O'Brien seems to be gradually stepping away from the "handsome hero" roles and clever pictures are promised for this actor during the year. With his director, Robert Ellis, and leading lady, Ruby De Remer, and members of his company, Mr. O'Brien is now in the Thousand Islands making exteriors for his newest picture, "A Fool and His Money," by George Barr McCutcheon. "Mysterious Moments" and "The Honor of His House" are at present the stories selected to follow his present picture.

Rachel Crowthers' famous stage play "Old Lady 31" is to be made into a picture by Screen Classics, Inc., for Metro release.

Elaine Hammerstein will soon complete her latest Selznick picture, "The Woman Game," by Leighton Osmun and Frank Dazey, under the direction of William P. S. Earle, and begin "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," under the direction of George Archainbaud. Following this, Miss Hammerstein appears in "The Palace of Darkened Windows," "The Proof of the Pudding," by Meredith Nicholson, and "Keep Him Guessing."

Owen Moore, who is now at Selznick West Coast studio with his director, Wesley Ruggles, working on his new picture, "Love Among the Chickens," by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, has a promising list to offer for the year. "His Word of Honor," by Edgar Franklin; "Chivalrous Charlie," by May Tully, who is co-author of Lewis J. Selznick's stage success, "Bucking the Tiger," are announced to follow the Wodehouse picture.

Among the big specials to be made by Selznick this year are "The Woman God Sent," by Sophie Irene Loeb, of the Evening World staff, already well under way with Zena Keefe in the leading role, directed by Larry Trimble, who adapted the script for the screen. Another feature which Mr. Selznick is enthusiastic over is "The Prince of Pines," a story by Williard Mack, which will go into production in a short time under the direction of Burton George. Mr. George made the first two one-reel pictures "Little Red Riding Hood" and "The Faded Butterfly."

The Herbert Kaufman Weekly, illustrated editorials, are now in the hands of John Lopez, and will be released after a sufficient number of them have been prepared. They are something entirely new to the screen.

The West Coast studio under the direction of Harry Rapf are producing, according to schedule.

Strong Cast In Levering Film

Hodkinson to Distribute "His Temporary Wife"; Set for February

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of its distribution of "His Temporary Wife," produced and presented by Joseph Levering with a strong cast inclusive of Ruby de Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong, W. T. Carleton, Armond Cortez and half a dozen other well known players. The story is by Robert Ames Bennet and gives Miss de Remer, who was taken out of the Zeigfeld Follies by Rex Beach and elevated overnight to be the star of his big picture, "The Auction Block," the best opportunity of her career, it is stated.

In announcing the release of "His Temporary Wife" for the month of February, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation dwells with considerable detail on the exploitation possibilities to be found in the picture. The announcement follows:

"This picture comes into the market unheralded and containing many elements that will make it popular with exhibitors. It has besides its excellent production qualities and standards the exploitation values that go along with half a dozen widely known star names. Any one of the four names in the cast would give "His Temporary Wife" power with the public and the grouping of these names meets the now popular all-star cast requirements of thousands of exhibitors.

'Tis said that there are many dollars worth of entertainment in Madge Kennedy's latest Goldwyn picture, "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness."

"His Temporary Wife" is a society drama with elements of melodramatic action. Novel in its theme and powerful in its enactment, this unusually fine production is assured of exhibitor as well as public approbation, for seldom has an all-star picture given such wide scope for the talents of its famed principals.

"More beautiful than she was in 'The Auction Block,' Miss de Remer reveals dramatic ability that will surprise her big following. As for Edmund Breese, nothing he has done for the screen since his masterful portrayal in 'The Master Mind' compares with his brilliant performance in 'His Temporary Wife,' and Eugene Strong, who distinguished himself in support of Blanche Bates in 'The Border Legion,' also appears to splendid advantage."

"Blind Youth" Director Ill, Replaced

Owing to the illness of Al Green he will be unable to direct the second National Picture Theatres production "Blind Youth," and Lewis J. Selznick announces that he has engaged Edward Sloman to replace Mr. Green.

Louise Fazenda, a popular member of the Mack Sennett aggregation, seems to be "hogging the show" in "Down on the Farm," the current Sennett comedy for release by Paramount-Artcraft

Variety in Sennett's Latest

Many Qualities Said to Be Blended in "Down on the Farm" Now Finished

MACK SENNETT announces the completion of his fourth five-part production "Down on the Farm." The work in the cutting room will soon be done, and E. M. Asher, business manager of the Mack Sennett Comedies, will then take this Mr. Sennett's latest creation to New York. A successful career as producer of comedy and comedy dramas promises to duplicate Mr. Sennett's past performances as master of the two-reel feature.

Exploitation of "Down on the Farm" develops the promise of something, "really new," according to the statement of Mr. Sennett, who bases his assurances on the following possibilities to be found in the production:

"'Down on the Farm,'" says the Sennett statement, "blends melodrama, satire, legitimate drama, a bright tinge of burlesque, humor that suggests pathos and romance real and authentic. 'Down on the Farm' is a spectacle.

"Handled in a vein of lightest banter are the love affairs of a pretty little miss and her two persistent Romeos, one a farm-hand who loves her for herself alone and the other a scoundrel of a real estate dealer who loves her for her financial prospects. The working out of this angle of the story is accomplished with such ingenuity that the beholder hardly knows whether to laugh at the travesty or thrill at the story. As a result, he does both, which is why 'Down on the Farm' has been called 'a thrill divided by laughter.'

"Naturally in a production of such a work the entire menagerie celebrated in sections in other Sennett presentations is here disclosed in ensemble effectiveness. Some of the most appealing of the scenes are those in which the four-footed and the feathered players of the Sennett Studio are shown in action."

SLIDES ON LINCOLN'S LIFE IS AMERICANIZATION SUGGESTION

A CONCRETE suggestion for the inauguration of the Americanization campaign on the part of the industry throughout the country, on Lincoln's birthday, is advanced by Joseph F. Coufal, general manager of the Standard Slide Corporation.

"Hand-colored slides showing the life of Lincoln, followed by the man's most famous remarks, could be arranged for presentation in the 18,000 picture theatres of the country and the 6,000 non-theatrical screens as well," he suggests. "The program could be concluded with a pledge which each patron would be asked to give by an American Legion representative. The total cost of twenty slides would be but about three dollars.

"If Secretary Lane and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will give this plan endorsement our corporation stands ready to assume all expense for production of these slides, distribution of same and the circularizing of every theatre, feeling confident that exhibitors will respond in sufficient numbers to preclude the possibility of any loss."

Republic Handling Chaplins

Twelve of Old Mutual Subjects which Clark-Cornelius Controlled Included

THE success attained by the Republic Distributing Corporation in its sales of the Charlie Chaplin pictures it has been releasing for Kleine, has led that company to obtain the exclusive distribution of twelve more Chaplin comedies, believing that the market for the Chaplin humor was never better than it is at present.

These are the successes made by the comedian for the old Mutual Company, which have been controlled by Clark-Cornelius and which embrace what are considered some of the best two-reel subjects in which Chaplin appeared.

They include "The Floorwalker," regarded by many exhibitors as the best comedy Chaplin ever made, "The Vagabond," "The Pawn Shop," "The Rink," "The Adventurer," "Easy Street," "The Fireman," "The Count," "Behind the Screen," "The Immigrant," "The Cure" and "One A. M."

The initial selling of these pictur has been in the hands of Hallmar and up to date the first three men tioned have been released. The nex to be released will be "The Rink,' which is scheduled for issue on Feb ruary 12. The rest will be release at intervals of six weeks.

Reports from all over the countr show that exhibitors have turned t Chaplin comedies to put new life int their business when attendance ha fallen off. One exhibitor writes tha a Chaplin comedy has never failed t fill his house, and that he has show one picture fifteen different times sinc he has been in business and that th returns have always warranted it.

How the Kaufman Weekly is Made

Since the start of the nation wide advertising of the Herbert Kaufman Weekly was made considerable interest has been manifest in just how the actual producing of these pictured editorials is being carried on.

At present two of the one-reel subjects have been completed and the start of the third is expected soon. The first one is "Little Red Riding Hood." This is a pictured version of the Kaufman editorial on the tragedy of a young girl, brought up under strict parents, who comes to ruin through ignorance.

The scenes are entirely separate tableaux, each distinct from the other—part literal, part symbolic—each illustrating a title taken verbatim from the Kaufman editorial.

Almost without sequence and with parts unrelated this method of handling the pictured editorial is said to result in a pictured story that is powerful in its appeal. The essence of the gripping editorial is not lost and the pointed editorial of the typed page is made even plainer through the eye.

The second "Kaufman Weekly" is titled "The Faded Butterfly" and has in its leading role Mme. Haline Bruzovna famous Polish actress.

Exploitation on "Cinema Murder" Attracts

Advance reports of the high quality of Cosmopolitan Productions "The Cinema Murder," a Paramount-Artcraft Picture, and the announcements of the wide exploitation in newspapers, magazines, billboards and elsewhere which is being given it, have attracted a great deal of attention among exhibitors throughout the country as evidenced by the flood of inquiries that are pouring daily into the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges and the Home Office of International Film Service at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

"The Cinema Murder's" advertising and publicity campaign will rival, it is said, the most pretentious ever inaugurated for a motion picture. Advertising copy in big smashes will be placed in newspapers throughout the country, and special articles written by such writers as Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Van de Water, Ada Patterson, Alan Dale, Fay King, Nell Brinkley, Nellie Bly, Harry Hershfield, etc. will be published in the news columns.

Film to Aid Exhibitors Lincoln Week

"The Land of Opportunity," an Americanization feature which Lewis J. Selznick has made at the suggestion of Secretary of the Interior Lane, promises to serve a double purpose inasmuch as Mr. Selznick intends to lend a helping hand to the exhibitor by having this picture ready for presentation in any theatre in the country not later than Lincoln Birthday Week, February 12.

The release date has been announced as February 8, four days before the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday.

"Heart of a Child" for Nazimova

Work Well Under Way on a Story Different from Her Usual

WORK on the production of the latest Nazimova starring vehicle, "The Heart of a Child," adapted by Charles Bryant from Frank Danby's novel of the same name, is well under way, according to advices received this week at the offices of Metro Pictures Corporation.

California's ideal weather has been an aid to Ray C. Smallwood, directing Nazimova in her newest photoplay, so that not only has he been enabled to shoot many of the interior scenes, but to go on location for outdoor work.

Though distinctly different from any previous offering of the star, the locale in the first part being the Limehouse district of London, corresponding to New York's lower East Side, "The Heart of a Child" is said to present a wealth of opportunities for artistic settings. The career of the heroine carries her from the tenements to the theatre and thence into the world of British aristocracy. Hence, as much care has been taken in providing striking interiors as was the case in "Stronger Than Death," Nazimova's latest release, though the latter might seem at first thought to require a greater degree of color in production. The art work is in the hands of Allen Ruoff.

First view of Nazimova in her latest picture, "Stronger Than Death," released by Metro

The story of "The Heart of a Child" is considered by those who have followed most closely the trend of good English writing for the past quarter-century, to be Frank Danby's masterpiece. This critical opinion takes into consideration the author's other works of note, including "Dr. Phillips," "A Babe in Bohemia," "Baccarat," "Concert Pitch," "Joseph in Jeopardy," "Pigs in Clover," "The Sphynx's Lawyer," "Twilight" and "Full Swing."

For this novel which Nazimova has taken for translation to the screen depicts the carer of Sally Snape, a girl orphaned early in her girlhood by a domestic tragedy and thrown into the world with no other protection than her inborn sense of right and self-respect. Her first move for self-support is to go into a pickle and jam factory, then an acident occurs and the girl attracts the attention of Lady Dorothea Lythan, who makes it her interest to find Sally a position in a fashionable modiste's shop in London.

Here it is that Lord Kidderminster first really becomes aware of Sally's beauty, though chance has thrown the two together twice before. He backs her in a theatrical revue, on the advice of one of the shrewdest managers in England; and then falls in love with her. Between this and the happy ending is a multitude of obstacles, but Sally has the heart of a child, and this very simplicity in the end paves the way in her final hapiness.

The photography is being done by Rudolph Bergquist; and the cast engaged in support of Nazimova includes Charles Bryant, as Lord Kidderminster; Ray Thompson, Nell Newman, Victor Potel, Eugene Klum, Claire Du Brey, Jane Sterling, John Steppling, William J. Irving, and Myrtle Risbell.

Realart Closes More Contracts

Poli Circuit Is Latest Signed; Dwan's Feature in South

REALART star productions will be shown through the entire Poli circuit in Connecticut and Massachusetts as a result of a contract signed last week.

This announcement by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland comes only one week after the news of Realart's booking twenty-two big theatres in the Keith and Proctor and B. S. Moss chains, and assures a splendid introduction of Realart products to many New England audiences represented by the Poli circuit.

The deal was closed with R. C. Miller, booking representative for Poli, by Lester W. Adler, Realart's New York manager. With the signing of the Poli contract Realart's theatre connections are extended to every big amusement chain in the country, according to Mr. Ragland.

"Following only one week after the tie-up with Keith and Proctor and B. S. Moss," declared Mr. Ragland, "the cantract with Poli indicates what our pictures have done to establish the reputation of quality among the men most influential in the industry. Telegrams have been pouring in from showmen in all parts of the country telling in plain language what our products yield in financial returns. We have made it a point to publish many of these messages in the trade papers to give the industry an idea of the response which has met Realart's first film offerings."

In addition to the announcement of the Poli acquisition by Realart, Mr. Ragland reports that contracts for productions featuring Realart stars have come in abundantly from all parts of the country. Among the prominent bookings are Shea's Hippodrome at Buffalo, New York; the Strand, Cincinnati, Ohio, I. Lisbon, proprietor; New Miller theatre, Los Angeles, Fred Miller, proprietor; the Rialto theatre, New York; the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, Turner and Dahnken, proprietors; the Majestic theatre, Tulsa, Oklahoma, Glenn Condon, proprietor.

Mary Miles Minter, Realart star, who is scoring a success in "Anne of Green Gables," and whose new picture is nearing release

"Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dawn production, will have an aggregate run of three months in twelve Southwestern picture houses of the E. H. Hulsey chain, following the contract announced by Mr. Ragland.

A seven-day showing of the Mayflower photoplay in cities ranging in size from only 10,000 to 100,000 is said to set a new Realart record in the movement for longer runs for feature pictures in moderate sized towns.

The deal which is declared by General Sales Manager Ragland to be one of the most significant and remarkable on the company books was closed last week with Mr. Hulsey of the Southern Enterprises by Diaz Callahan, Realart manager at Dallas, Texas.

The contract which Southern Enterprises has made with Realart will give "Soldiers of Fortune" a run totalling 84 days in 12 towns having a total population of 655,474 inhabitants. In San Angelo, Texas, with a population of only 10,321, the film is scheduled to run seven days at the Lyric theatre.

New Producing Unit for the Republic Film

An organization for the making of Lloyd Carleton productions for Republic Film Corporation has been incorporated in California under the name of the Clermont Photoplay Corporation, which will have H. N. Clermont as General Manager. Contract was recently made by Republic for a series of eight productions to be made by Director Lloyd Carleton, who will have Ruth Clifford as the star.

Rolin Film to Celebrate New Studio's Opening

Producer Hal E. Roach soon will move the Harold Lloyd Comedy Company and the Rolin Comedy troupers, headed by "Snub" Pollard, to the new home of the Rolin Film Company at Culver City, a suburb of Los Angeles.

It is promised to be some housewarming. A Spanish barbecue, vaudeville show and athletic events are on the program. The Spanish feast is to be spread on the new stage. The famous Rolin Company Band will then take a chunk out of the musical program. The band has a large repertoire and producer Roach says they play both pieces well.

Harold Lloyd and Mildred Davis will stage a dancing act. The vaudeville bill is not confined to the Rolin troupers alone, but will be participated in by several of the invited celebrities. Roach threatens to horn in with a saxaphone solo. "Snub" Pollard's musical ability has its limits, but he promises to show all present that he is master of the bass drum.

Author Ibanez to Visit Western Studios

Vicente Blasco Ibanez, author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse", is en route to California from New York to pay a visit to the Metro studios in Hollywood. Since his arrival in this country a few months ago, the brilliant Spanish writer has expressed a keen desire to see how American motion pictures are made, and his present trip to the Pacific coast center of motion picture production is doubly significant to him inasmuch as Metro will produce "The Four Horsemen" on the screen.

Metro is reported to have purchased the screen rights to "The Four Horsemen" in the face of strong competition and plans to translate it to the silver sheet with an all-star cast.

Topics of Day Aiding Relief Campaign

The Near East Relief Campaign is being widely advertised via the motion picture screen in The Literary Digest "Topics of the Day." To aid starving people in devasted areas abroad is the object of the campaign. The Near East Relief was incorporated by Act of Congress to carry on the work formerly performed by The American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief.

On February 1, the intensive campaign will start and it is scheduled to continue until February 21.

Mme. Petrova Changes Road Program

Mme. Petrova, who has been making an extensive vaudeville tour, has canceled the rest of her Eastern time and exchanged it for Western time, as she is particularly desirous of playing California, Colorado, and Kansas. Before starting out for California, Petrova will return to New York for one week. Madame will continue her series of articles on motion picture topics in Shadowland and Photoplay Journal.

Another Body Backs Selznick

Northwest Exhibitors' Association Endorses National Picture Theatres, Inc.

THE Northwest Exhibitors' Association is announced as the latest organized body of leading exhibitors to endorse National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president.

About three weeks ago the Miami Valley Exhibitor's League expressed its confidence in the precepts behind National Picture Theatres, Inc., following a four-day discussion of the proposition from all angles. A committee of the Miami Valley League came to New York especially to confer with Lewis J. Selznick personally in connection with details of National Theatres. Returning to Dayton, Ohio, the committee called a special meeting of their body and in their report unanimously endorsed and recommended Mr. Selznick's plan.

As announced last week, Chicago exhibitors were next following the Miami Valley body, to rally about Mr. Selznick and National Picture Theatres. Attention at this time was called to the fact that for the first time in Chicago film history all the big competing companies operating circuits of theatres had pledged their support to Balaban and Katz, Jones, Linick and Schafer, and Andrew Karzas. These circuits, with their allied interests, control the one hundred most important theatres in Chicago.

With National Picture Theatres, Inc., so firmly entrenched in exhibitor favor as Mr. Selznick now believes it to be with such evident support, it is expected that additional announcements of unusual moment to the industry will issue from Mr. Selznick's office within the near future.

F. P.-Lasky Plant Open Soon

Laboratory on Long Island Expected to Be in Operation Within a Month

WITHIN a month the new laboratory of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Long Island City, designed by and being equipped under the personal supervision of Frank E. Meyer, Assistant Secretary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be in operation. Work has been pushed on the laboratory in order to relieve the congestion incident to working in four separate laboratories, two in New York and two in New Jersey. All the pictures produced in the Eastern Studios will be developed and printed in this building.

In addition to the office and a complete research laboratory, this building will contain two separate and distinct film laboratories. On the first floor a machine developing system is being installed under the supervision of the Spoor-Thompson Company. Six of their latest machines will be working with a capacity of 30,000 feet of finished film per hour, or nearly 2,000,000 feet per week. These machines are interesting due to the fact that the printed film is inserted at one end of the machine and comes out at the opposite end thoroughly developed, washed, dried, polished and tinted, ready for shipment, it is stated.

On the second floor the installation will consist of the regular drum and 750,000 and 1,000,000 feet a week can be handled in addition to all the negative development and sample prints. A complete renovating department also will be installed where all films sent in by exchanges for the correction will be taken care of.

Ince Studios to Publish "The Silversheet"

Exhibitors and patrons of motion pictures who have looked to New York for news and views of the activities of Cinema celebrities will be interested in the announcement that a new and unique magazine to be called "The Silversheet" will shortly be published in the Thomas H. Ince Studios in Culver City, for circulation among theatre-owners and their public as a distinct innovation in fresh-from-the-studios journalism.

The Eastern offices of producing and distributing organizations have published many magazines and papers designed to engage the attention of the trade, but "The Silversheet" will establish a precedent in that it will embody news, editorials and features for the triple purpose of advancing the best interests of the exhibitor, the play-goer, and the hundreds of men and women employed within the Thomas H. Ince Studios.

Hunt Stromberg, formerly director of advertising and publicity for one of the largest motion picture organizations in New York, will be editor-in-chief of "The Silversheet."

Heart Interest Theme in Mayer Production

Heart interest is sounded in Louis B. Mayer's new First National attraction, "The Fighting Shepherdess," which will be released shortly. It is a picturization of Caroline Lockhart's story, with Anita Stewart as the star and Edward Jose as the director.

The theme centers about the fight which Kate Prentice makes against the slander and bitter opposition of a small, narrow-minded town. It has a good share of light comedy and drama, but in the main the production rests on the stirring appeal aroused by the figure of a sweet, innocent young girl surrounded by a pack of back-bitting egotists.

Supporting Anita Stewart, the cast contains Wallace MacDonald, Noah Beery, Walter Long, Eugenie Besserer, Gibson Gowland. Ben Lewis. Calvert Carter and Maude Wayne.

"U" Cameraman Goes to South Africa

Orrin Denny, cameraman, left New York last week for London and will proceed from there to the Belgian Congo, in South Africa, where he will join the Universal Smithsonian Expedition. Mr. Denny will take the place of Pliny W. Horne, who was seriously injured in the railroad wreck which recently caused Dr. J. R. Armstrong and William Stowell to lose their lives. Mr. Denny has had wide experience as a cameraman, and has worked in foreign countries before.

Special Writer Engaged by Universal

Mrs. Marie Rask, well-known special writer and playwright, has been engaged by Universal to write special articles and features. Before engaging with Universal, Mrs. Rask had a wide experience in journalism and brings to her work a fund of knowledge.

Simplex Notes

An indication of the great popularity of the motion picture for educational as well as for amusement purposes is well reflected in the recent action of the Navy Department in establishing a practical school for motion picture projectionists in this city. This school, which is located at the Naval Dock at the foot of 96th Street, North River, is equipped with projectors of various types upon which the aspiring future Naval projectionist is taught the principle of motion picture projection.

In the past it has been customary for the crews of the numerous Naval vessels to purchase their projector equipment through various funds and appropriations. This resulted in indiscriminate purchasing of equipment, which finds the Navy using machines of types varying from the semi-professional portable to the heavy commercial Simplex. And then too, on account of using the very best of latest film subjects by the Navy, it was discovered that many films were returned to the exchanges in questionable condition due to badly conditioned and inadequate equipment and partially inexperienced projectionists.

In order to standardize as much as possible the equipment in the Navy, at a recent meeting of the Naval Committee it was decided that different types of projectors were to be specified for the different types of ships and that instead of putting the machines in charge of men who had a knowledge of electrical matters only, a regular trained corps of up-to-date projectionists would have charge of all things pertaining to the showing of Naval movies.

Lieut. Swanberg, who has charge of the school thus established, was a recent visitor at the Simplex plant and arranged with the Simplex officials to have a representative deliver a lecture on the "Simplex, its care and its construction" at least once a month before the Naval Class. Lieut. Swanberg is high in his praise of the part that the projector is playing in Naval matters and was exceedingly interested by what he saw at the home of the Simplex.

Metro Establishes Research Department

A research department is the newest addition to the technical division of the production forces at the Metro studios in Hollywood. David S. McCann has been placed in charge of the work by Clifford P. Butler, general superintendent of the studio. Mr. McCann has been attorney for Metro in Los Angeles for two years and will continue at that post.

Controversy on "The Tong Man"

Robertson-Cole Exchange Manager Says Fuss Is Entirely Local One

THE Robertson-Cole Co. announces that "The Tong Man," the Chinese melodrama starring Sessue Hayakawa, is being rebooked for extended runs after playing to capacity first-run houses throughout the United States. "Despite a ripple caused in San Francisco by the charge, that 'The Tong Man' was 'simply propaganda to mislead Americans as to the character of the Chinese,' and the application then for an injunction against the picture, 'The Tong Man' is the sensation of the Western Coast," says Robertson-Cole.

C. H. Chu, consul-general of China in San Francisco, it is said, asked the police to prevent the picture being shown, saying that it misrepresents the Chinaman. The police declined to act until required to do so to support action of the courts. Corporal Peter Peshon of the public morals squad, who has the supervision of motion pictures, is reported to have declared that the picture is not immoral and that although it is filled with strong scenes, he could see no reason why it should not be permitted.

A strange phase of the matter is that "The Tong Man" is laid in San Francisco, and the novel from which the picture was made, "The Dragon's Daughter," was written by a San Francisco newspaper man, Clyde C. Westover, who is said to have gotten the material from which he wrote his story within a few blocks of the place where men of the same race as those he studied during his newspaper days about Chinatown are trying to "knock out" the picture.

Lee See Nam, editor-in-chief of the newspaper, Young China, is quoted as having said that all the Chinese who had seen the picture declared it to be a "piece of spite work." He said the picture had been put through by Japanese who are trying to get away the trade of the Chinamen in America.

Star of a hundred good pictures, Mae Marsh, who will be welcomed back to the screen in Gasnier productions, to be distributed by Robertson-Cole

"From what I can gather at the private showings which I have been asked to give, as a result of the controversy," said Robertson-Cole's exchange manager in San Francisco, "the matter is purely a local one, and not likely to come up elsewhere in the country. Of course, there is nothing whatever in any insinuations that there is a purpose to injure any race deliberately through the picture.

"As to the veracity of the atmosphere and action, that can be settled right here better than anywhere else, for a San Francisco man, Clyde C. Westover, wrote the story, which has been carefully followed. He is a man of standing here in the literary and newspaper world, and it is inconceivable that he should have included details not true to life."

The managemment of the Rialto introduced "The Tong Man" to San Francisco by means of an attractive teaser campaign. Small advertisements were used in the newspapers featuring the black silhouetted figure of a Chinaman with a hatchet, and the words, "Gasp Out Loud!" Come next week and we'll prove to you that an audience can gasp out loud—a few will scream—at one of the scenes in "The Tong Man."

Pictures Lead, Commerce Follows

American Pictures in South Open the Way for Business

THE old adage "commerce follows the flag" needs modifying in the opinion of film men. Business these days, with all dreams of colonial expansion banished, is showing a tendency to follow other ideals. Nowadays it is the movies that have taken the lead, and business is showing an in increasing tendency to follow this leadership, according to John L. Day, South American representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has just returned from a five months trip through that territory.

"American business men are just beginning to reap the benefits of the tremendous hold American motion-pictures have obtained upon the people of the South American countries," said Mr. Day in discussing film conditions in the Latin-American republics. "The war enabled American pictures to wrest the leadership away from the French and Italian manufacturers of films, and so solidly entrenched are our pictures that it will be impossible for European exporters to regain their lost leadership as long as America continues to develop and improve the art of the screen.

"When the South American saw French fashions and French ideals as reflected in the photoplays from that country, his business inquiries were generally forwarded in that direction. French and Italian pictures were shown almost exclusively in the larger theatres, with the result that the public had little opportunity to become acquainted with American standards of living. The war brought this much desired change about, however, and, although the American manufacturer may scarcely appreciate the fact, motion pictures from this country are serving a highly important purpose as propaganda for American merchandise as well as American films.

"Thanks to the movies, South Americans are becoming better acquainted with the people of the United States. The visualization of American scenery, fashions, business conditions and standards of living is the object of the keenest interest on the part of the men and women of South America. The high grade films have opened the eyes of the Latin-Americans to the fact that Americans are not such 'dollar chasers' as they were led to believe from the propaganda spread by exporters from Europe. New York fashions, they are discovering, are quite as up-to-date and as attractive as those from Paris.

Josie Sedgwick who is Jack Dempsey's leading woman in the Pathe serial "Daredevil Jack"

"Our pictures are shown today in practically every high class theatre in South America, and the demand for these films is increasing enormously. Leading exhibitors have told me that it will be impossible for European film exporters to supplant American pictures in the estimation of the public. The result is that the people of South America will become even more intimately acquainted with American standards through the medium of the screen, and this is certain to have a beneficial reaction upon our business in South America."

National Film Takes Out Weather Insurance

To protect itself against the coming rainy season in California, the National Film Corporation of America has applied for a blanket insurance policy with Lloyds of London against bad weather, as well as labor troubles and other contingencies within the ken of motion picture producers, according to I. Bernstein, production manager. Studio advices say that the National plant in Hollywood, Calif., has also been insured for a large amount by the Aetna Company.

Madge Kennedy Starts Work in the East

"Trimmed With Red", starring Madge Kennedy was placed in charge of Hugo Dallin, director, by Samuel Goldwyn, and goes into production this week at the Goldwyn Eastern studio, as the second picture made in the East this season. Since Leroy Scott's Eminent Authors Picture was shot by Paul Scardon, larger quarters have been secured at the Oliver Studios, and the first of seven elaborate sets for "Trimmed With Red" is completed.

Miss Kennedy has arrived from Culver City where she has finished Octavus Roy Cohen's first story for Goldwyn called "Two Cents Worth of Humaneness." "Trimmed With Red" is a thrilling society drama based on Wallace Irwin's famous serial which recently entertained the readers of the Saturday Evening Post.

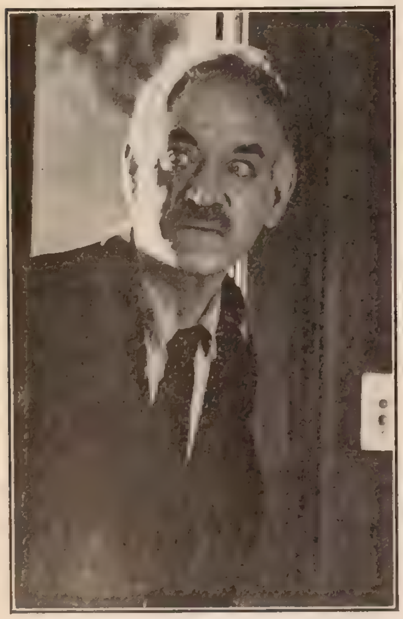
New Sennett Film Gets First Run in Frisco

E. M. Asher, special representative of Mack Sennett, is in San Francisco supervising the initial presentation of Mr. Sennett's latest five reel comedy, "Down On The Farm," which is booked for an indefinite run at the Tivoli theatre beginning January 11.

Prior to going to San Francisco, plans were made for the presentation which it is asserted, will have many novel and attractive features in keeping with this new comedy from the producer of "Mickey," and "Yankee Doodle In Berlin."

Board of Review Rates "Pollyanna" Best Yet

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures were so enthusiastic over Mary Pickford's newest production, "Polyanna," that they issued a special report on the picture in which they not only give it the highest possible rating, but in additon declare it to be the best picture that Miss Pickford has ever made. "Pollyanna" was released on January 18 and is the first production Miss Pickford has made for the "Big Four."



America's great character actor is Frank Keenan, now appearing in "Smoldering Embers," a Pathe release.

In "The Right of Way" Bert Lytell forsakes farce comedy for the time being to a serious role. The Picture will soon be released by Metro.

Metro Gets "The Girl Patsy"

New Production Will Likely Present Viola Dana in Stellar Role of Film

THE picture rights to "The Girl Patsy" have been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation. It is likely that the play will be used as a starring vehicle for Viola Dana. "The Girl Patsy" is a comedy in three acts and was produced in New York City several seasons ago. It also played with considerable success throughout the country.

Viola Dana is now busy with the picturization of "Eliza Comes to Stay", by the English actor-playwright, H. V. Esmond. It was adapted to the screen by A. P. Younger and is being directed by W. A. Howell, a newcomer on Metro's staff of directors. In it the petite comedienne has a part similar to that in "Blue Jeans", the style of characterization which she particularly favors.

"Eliza Comes to Stay" is scheduled for release late in February. Following that Viola Dana will appear in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," the successful farce by Mark Swan and C. W. Bell. "The Girl Patsy" will undoubtedly follow this farce.

"The Girl Patsy" is the story of a young waif, who is adopted into a wealthy home. The dissolute wreck of humanity, who claims to be the child's father, attempts to use her as a means of blackmail. Failing in this, he almost succeeds in ruining the happiness which the child has found, and in preventing her marriage to a wealthy young admirer, when it is discovered that the man who has adopted her is actually her father.

Expects Much of New Film

"Everything But the Truth" Considered Ideal Vehicle for Lyons and Moran

THE Universal expresses the opinion that its forthcoming production, "Everything but the Truth," written by Edgar Franklin and scheduled to play the comedians, Lyons and Moran, in the leading parts, is going to prove the one of the cleverest screen comedies that Universal has ever filmed. In discussing the possibilities of this production, Universal says:

"The possibilities which Mr. Franklin's very unusual plot offers these two popular comedians are unlimited. That it should have been selected as their first five reel picture is a splendid augury of what may be expected from them later.

"If 'Everything but the Truth' had been written especially for Lyons and Moran, the characters of the two young suburban bridegrooms could not have been better adapted to their individual and inimitable abilities. Anyone who has read the story, as it appeared in magazine-serial form, will have no difficulty in visualizing the rapidity of action, ludicrous situations unmarred by farcial exaggeration, density of the various complications and near tragic episodes with which the filmed production will abound.

"From start to finish the comedy is one that will hold the attention and keep the uninformed guessing as to its probable outcome. The roles played by Lyons and Moran are equally balanced and allow much latitude for individual interpretation."

"The Place of Honey-Moons" Finished

The Pioneer-Atlas Production of Harold Macgrath's novel, "The Place of Honeymoons," is finished with the exception of a few retakes. Emily Stevens, the star, is now in New York preparing for a tour in her new stage production. Keenan Buel, who directed the production, will probably have charge of the cutting.

House Changes Policy to Book Dwan Feature

"When a first run house takes a feature for the second run, there's a bag of money in the woodpile."

So declares Jay Emanuel, Realart manager in Philadelphia, who came to New York last week with glowing reports of the thriving picture business in his city. According to Mr. Emanuel the outlook for the industry in his territory has never been better.

"Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, is the feature picture which caused the Victoria Theatre of Philadelphia to vary its strictly first-run policy by contracting for the film after it had been signed for the Colonial Theatre in Germantown, the residence district of the city.

Exploitation Aids for the "Tiger Girl"

"Tiger Girl," the Triangle production, adapted from "The Lily and the Rose," will be available to exhibitors on February 15th at all United Exchanges. It is the intention of United to exploit this picture for the benefit of exhibitors. A press book, which will be ready within a few days, has been prepared by exploitation experts, and it is stated contains innumerable hints for exhibitors. An attractive set of lobby displays and posters will also be available within a few days.

Christie Comedies Score in Bay City

E. H. Emmick, who operates the Peerless Film Service, known in San Francisco and the western district as the House of Comedies, has announced another score for Christie Comedies, of which he is the sole distributor in the territory.

Christie Comedies, according to Mr. Emmick, will accompany the new releases of Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, in their latest United Artists' pictures at a new first run theatre in Oakland.

Pretty Peggy Hyland's next picture is title "Faith." It is scheduled for January release and is expected to be a popular Po subject

Selznick Press Book on "The Imp" Ready

The press book, or exhibitors' campaign book, on "The Imp," the second Elsie Janis production for Selznick Pictures, was delivered from the press this week, and has been sent to the Select exchanges for distribution to exhibitors who can use it to advantage in presenting the picture.

"The Imp" press book is considered one of the best yet turned out from the Selznick workshop, which has taken great pains to give the exhibitor every aid possible on each picture booked. Watt L. Parker is editor of the Selznick and Select press books.

The press book for "The Imp" has a cover done in black, white and green, designed to give ideas to the exhibitor in playing the feature. On the inside front cover is a sample ad covering four columns in width. Next comes an introductory page, sprinkled with helpful sentences minus the extravagant statements employed by some to "sell the exhibitor." These statements, it is made known, are not included in the Selznick plan of operation. The cast, program readers, catch lines and a sample cut of Miss Janis fill page four with usefulness. On page five are advance notices, current reviews and the story. Pages six and seven are given over to exploitation helps. All "stunts" suggested are practical and can be used by any exhibitor. Then follow halftone display ads, newspaper line ads and production cuts. These include a great variety, enough so in fact to let each exhibitor suit his own individual taste and needs. On page eleven are suggestions for a mail campaign, and short lines which contribute spice if used in the house program. On the twelfth and last page the accessories are illustrated, including twenty-four sheets, two three-sheets, two one-sheets and and one six-sheet.

Pathe Helps to Exploit "Other Men's Shoes"

With the release date of the initial Edgar Lewis production, "Other Men's Shoes," which is set for February 1st, approaching, Pathe announces many aids for the benefit of the exhibitor in exploiting the production. Besides the usual advertising material Pathe issues a special press sheet for the production, an enlarged campaign book, a special one-shee and a window card. It is also stated that a book store tie-up is under way with Andrew Soutar's novel, "Other Men's Shoes," from which the picturization was made.

Garson's Sets Are Genuine

WHEN Harry Garson began the production of "Eyes of Youth" and instructed his technical director to secure several tons of stucco concrete, mason's material and field stones, said technical director began deliberating as to what sort of an institution he had gotten into.

Later, when bulk amounts of field stone, bricks, stone and mortar, lime, concrete and asphaltum were ordered, the T. D. was in more than a dilemma. But when "Eyes of Youth" was completed and showed to more than the average advantage in point of scenic investiture, Garson's plans became simple.

His was a new idea. The Garson way became popular over night at Hollywood and surrounding studio centers. It was: Build your sets of stone, brick and concrete and they will be stone and brick and concrete in the showing. Jail walls will not shake in the wind. Ceilings will not droop. Walls will not vibrate. Painted masonry looks just what it is—build it.

Hence, Harry Garson began building stucco walls and brick walls and masonry walls and Circassian walnut ceilings and heavy-timbered ceilings, and "Eyes of Youth" contained no less than eight of this style of sets.

The Proctor home shown throughout the eight reels was built in the studio of concrete, brick, stone, hard wood and plaster. The road house front was ninety feet long and of stucco and brick. An interior contained stucco, field stone fireplace, Circassion walnut trim, and the entire three side walls made of plaster and later covered with water color tints. Actual timbering of library ceiling, cobble fireplace, solid wood trim, every item practical, as shown in the library and the piazza, bricked, stucco, masonry, and real hard wood trim.

United Buys Two Big Stories

English Melodrama for All Star Cast and Mystery Tale for Florence Reed

PRESIDENT J. A. BERST of United Picture Productions Corporation announces the purchase of "The Mayfair Mystery" a melodrama which has been presented on the English stage, and "The Curious Case of Marie Dupont," a mystery novel by Adele Luehrman, as a vehicle for Florence Reed.

"The Curious Case of Marie Dupont" was published a few years ago and proved one of the best sellers of its time. The author withheld the motion picture rights for some time, refusing many offers made for her work until Mr. Berst made her one that she felt she could not turn down because of its financial value.

The leading role in "The Curious Case of Marie Dupont" is one that should present Miss Reed in one of her best screen characterizations. It is one that calls for highly emotional acting.

A cast to support Miss Reed in "The Curious Case of Marie Dupont" will be engaged that will be fully up to the standard of previous productions in which this star has appeared, while the production end will be given expert care and attention.

"The Mayfair Mystery" is a Drury Lane type of melodrama—the sort of a melodrama that has been popular in England for years and when introduced to American audiences, meeting with immediate success. It is the kind of drama that will permit of many startling scenes, one that of a shipwreck in which an ocean liner is destroyed. Plans are being made to make this scene the most impressive of its kind ever introduced into a motion picture.

Supporting Cast in Jack Dempsey's Serial

The complete cast for the Jack Dempsey serial for Pathe, "Daredevil Jack," as announced by Robert Brunton, who is supervising the production, is as follows: Josephine Sedgwick, Hershall Mayall, Albert Cody, Ruth Langston, Frederic Starr, Frank Lanning, Spike Robinson, Clyde Benson, Aggie Herring, Al Kaufman, Edward Hearn, and S. E. Jennings.

"Additional News of the Producers will be found on Page 1300."

Joe Brandt has just returned from an extended trip and reports that the "Confession" in the territories that have already been sold is breaking house records, and the picture is being so well received that return dates are being demanded almost everywhere.

He reports the sale of the entire Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland to Mr. H. Porter Baldwin of Springfield, Mass. It is Mr. Baldwin's intention to complete at least two road show organizations.

Mr. Brandt also advises that the Equity Pictures Corporation of Michigan, in the Film Exchange Building, Detroit, have taken over the rights of the "Confession" for Michigan.

Smith Syndicate of West Enters Film Field

George H. Callaghan, prominent operator of the independent field, promoter and specialist in handling negative rights to independent productions throughout the World, in the capacity of special representative for the R. C. P. Smith Syndicate of Los Angeles, announces that this syndicate has launched its activities in the motion picture industry and will soon start production activities with some of the most popular stars of screendom on their list.

To date, according to Mr. Callaghan's announcement, the Smith Syndicate has signed a long term contract with the popular star, Zasu Pitts who made such a big success in the King Vidor productions, notably "Poor Relations." Mr. Callaghan announces that within the next few weeks he will be at liberty to give out the names of other stars to be enrolled under the banner of Smith Syndicate.

Cohns Survey Country

Jack and Harry Cohn have completed a survey of the territory in the United States which is booked for Hall Room Boys comedies for the coming year. According to Jack Cohn, who is in charge of the New York offices of the company, the survey shows that in every territory the largest and most important theatres are consistently booking the comedies, and that they have proved great successes. The manager of every exchange handling the series, according to Mr. Cohn, is enthusiastic in praise of the two-reelers.

Mr. Cohn also announced that the only open territory for the distribution of the Hall Room Boys series was Louisiana and Mississippi. The remainder of the country has been disposed of.

New Jans Feature Ready Soon

Work Progressing Satisfactorily on "Love Without Question" under Rolfe

PRODUCTION work on the first Jans Pictures Inc., feature, "Love Without Question", is progressing rapidly and satisfactorily.

B. A. Rolfe, who has personal charge of the production, and his associates announce that the picture is well on its way towards completion and that they soon hope to have it all filmed and ready for assembling and cutting.

As the locale of the story, which is an adaption of C. Wadsworth Camp's well known novel "The Abandoned Room", dates back forty years it has not been an easy matter to find the proper locations in which to film the exteriors. For one scene a peculiar type of house was necessary. Mr. Rolfe had his staff scouring the countryside in the vicinity of the studio to locate just the desired place. Finally one was found near Ten Eyck, New Jersey. In the story this will appear as the home of a multi-millionaire of two score years ago and fits to perfection the home described in the story.

Because the action of "Love Without Question" takes place during 1880, it will permit of some delightful lighting and photographic effects. Candle and lamp-light effects will be used exclusively. Mr. Rolfe has taken full advantage of the opportunity offered him in this respect, and he and his camera men have planned out some effects that seem bound to attract unusual attention, it is stated.

"Love Without Question" is said to be a story of love, mystery and adventure. As a novel it gained wide popularity because of the interesting characters it told of and the manner in which the mystery element was upheld. "In the film version the author's characters are brought to life while the mystery of the story is more forcibly brought out than in the novel," says the report from the Jans Pictures Inc.

"As the screen permits of such a wider range, Mr. Camp's story will be found to be of much greater interest than it was on the printed page."

Tarzan Film Ready February 1st

Cutting and Assembling Now Being Completed in California

"THE Return of Tarzan," Numa Pictures Corporation's picturization of the latest of the Edgar Rice Burroughs' stories, is expected to be ready for a New York showing by February first. Photographing was completed last week, and Directors Harry Revier and George Merrick are cutting and assembling the film in California. Gene Pollar, Walter Miller, Armond Cortez, Donna Ramirez and other members of the cast are expected back East this week.

This particular story opens on board a liner bound for Paris. Tarzan's adventures start with his answering the call for help from a stunning Countess who is being persecuted by a no-account brother named Rokoff. This same Rokoff becomes Tarzan's great enemy and it is the pursuit of him and his fiendish efforts at revenge on Tarzan that furnish the basic dramatic props of the entire picture.

In Paris Tarzan encounters a band of fighting Apaches, resulting in some fight-footage that is said to be especially good. Later the hero turns up in Algiers, where he goes through a series of adventures culminating in his departure for Cape Town in pursuit of the wiley Rokoff. On the voyage Tarzan is thrown overboard, and after various vicissitudes, finds his way to the jungle. He comes again to that section of Africa that had been his childhood home and reverts quickly to the half-savage ways of his early training. The later appearance in the jungle of Jane Porter and a party, who have also been shipwrecked, brings the story's romance to a happy ending.

"There are many incidents of jungle fighting said to be startlingly realistic in the picture, notably Tarzan's two hand-to-hand encounters with lions, and a furious struggle with a man-sized ape.

"More than 3,000 extra people have been used for the jungle stuff and varieties of background that cover 18,000 miles of travel have been wrought into the offering.

"A jungle scene meant the transplanting of 50 ton of palms, banana-trees, and all sorts of foliage to Balboa, California, with Charlie, the big elephant who plays a prominent role in the cast, acting as the head-mover."

Tower Reissue to Show Stars in Past Roles

"When the hilarity is due to the antics of such famous comedians as Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain and Chester Conklin, all featured in "Tillie's Punctured Romance", the six reel Mack Sennett masterpiece comedy, there is small room for doubt as to the production's success," says the Tower Film Corporation. The latest sale reported is for "A Burlesque on Carmen," which has been acquired for Eastern Canada by Maurice Davis of the Davis Amusement Enterprises of Montreal.

Villain Suddenly Takes Hero's Role in Fact

Paul Panzer, whose customary role on the celluloid is that of the villain, is said to have suddenly assumed the hero's part in the taking of a fire-scene in one of the episodes of "The Mystery Mind" recently. Violet MacMillan, the heroine, was rescued by Panzer, it is stated, from the flames of a burning structure, in which she was supposed to be trapped by the villain's forces. It seems that Panzer realized before anyone else that Miss MacMillan was in real danger and went promptly to her rescue.

Special Service Section on William Russel in
"The Valley of Tomorrow"

GENERAL SUMMARY OF THE FILM

THOSE who will play "The Valley of Tomorrow" have the prime requisites for a successful engagement, story, star, cast, direction and a fine scenic background.

The story is by Stephen Fox and was widely read in fiction form. It is particularly good photoplay material, being replete with dramatic situations, with a background of the mountains and outdoor life.

The cast is headed by William Russell, who specializes in roles commonly known as "blue short leads." In the support of the star are such well known players as Mary Thurman, Harvey Clark, Frank Brownlee and Pauline Curley.

The direction is by Emmett J. Flynn, who bears a good reputation for turning out pictures of this sort.

The production is in six reels. It was filmed very largely at Lake Tahoe, famous as a scenic spot, and has many wonderful shots.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

WHILE Dabney Morgan awaits trial for moonshining, word comes that his little sister has been betrayed. Released on parole, he hastens to avenge the wrong. En route, in desperate peril of his life, he is rescued by a stranger, who then hurries on his way. The whole Morgan clan is out scouring the forest for the guilty man, Enrico Colonna. One of them now rides up to Dabney with a bedraggled fugitive who cries, "I saved you!"

Torn by the conflicting claims of vengeance and personal gratitude, Dabney compromises with tradition and conscience by allowing Colonna an even break for liberty. At long distance his gun brings the Italian to the ground, wounded. Struggling with his aversion to killing a man who is down, Dabney glimpses again the vision of something finer and bigger than the "eye for eye" creed of his clan.

Still undecided, now covered by his own gun in the hands of Elenore Colonna, the Italian's adoring sister, Dabney is forced to carry his enemy to a hut in the woods and bind up his wounds. During that night-long vigil his heart opens to love for the girl, and his problem grows harder than before.

Then the evil-faced Fang Morgan, desiring Elenore for himself, convinces her that to save her brother's life it is necessary to take Dabney's. Removing the Italian's bandages, Fang leaves him to bleed to death, but tells the girl it was Dabney's deed. In her flaming passion Elenore tramples love under foot; but Dabney—who overhears Fang's plan—so maneuvers that her avenging shot fells the real murderer. Owning his love, Dabney forgives Elenore the attempt upon his life and tells his kinsman he himself shot Fang in self-defense.

Dabney returns to jail but is released for lack of evidence. When morning comes the two lovers set forth for Dabney's home in the valley below—the valley of new dreams and ideals—the Valley of Tomorrow.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here, and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

EXPLOITATION ANGLES

IN view of the magnificent natural scenery which is such an outstanding feature of "The Valley of Tomorrow," the scenic idea should be brought out as strongly as possible in all your lobby displays and decorations. The picture was filmed at picturesque Lake Tahoe, a mile above sea-level in the Sierra Nevadas, and anything in the way of stock supplies which will suggest the atmosphere of that wonderful region of mountain, forest and rushing river should be worked to a finish. Fir branches, where they can be secured without too great trouble, furnish most effective material for lobby trim.

The strikingly pictorial 24-sheet presents a glorious background of lake and valley encircled by the forest-clad mountains. The purely scenic part of this poster, preferably mounted on Boards as a cutout, will make up into a smashing panorama for lobby use.

The two lovers on horseback, figuring in the 24-sheet, will supply a highly attractive and striking cutout, to be used either in close conjunction with the panorama or separately. Given a strategic position, just outside the theatre, this poster cutout will bring in business.

The 3-sheet depicting William Russell alone in a pose of startled attention furnishes a smashing cutout of the star. Knock together a rough window framework and fasten it up outside at right angles to your house front. So place the cutout that the star appears to be looking through this bona-fide window. A remarkably lifelike effect can be secured that will command a third look from local fans and make them stop to read what's doing inside. Exhibit well in advance of the showing.

A delightful and fitting prologue stunt will be to have Charles Wakefield Cadman's famous concert song, "From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water," performed by a local singer, with back-drop or stage settings appropriate to the picture. The song is arranged for both men's and women's voices. If desired, the outdoor western atmosphere of the film might be suggested by having the soloist dress after the fashion of Mary Thurman in the picture, or—if a man—copy William Russell's style.

NEWSPAPER STORIES AND PROGRAM READERS

A Play of Mountain Life

"THE VALLEY OF TOMORROW" is essentially a drama of the mountains, imperiously demanding its rightful setting of rugged heights. The story begins with "the forest-clad peak men call Eden," and after thrillingly poignant chapters of romance, pathos, tragic struggle, laughter, love and heartache, brings the spectator out into the sunlit serenity of the Valley of Tomorrow. "Only the dawn knows where tomorrow begins."

Through the experience of one member of one family, the play traces the evolution of a race—a growth out of the pagan creed of "eye for eye" into the compassion and broad humanity of these later days. With his way unblazed before him, Dabney Morgan, a pioneer in this great adventure, struggles with the clamps of the traditional past, yet half distrusting the coming light.

As Victor Hugo truly said, "There is only one thing greater than armies, and that is an idea whose time has come." As this new idea of a better American manhood dawned upon his consciousness, Dabney Morgan suffered all the pangs of a new birth. Slowly and painfully, revenge and bitterness gave way to a merciful humanity.

William Russell Supreme

William Russell, in the role of Dabney Morgan, astonishes with the sureness of his grasp upon the subtle psychology of the drama, and the utter art with which he projects the man's suffering and gradually expanding vision. His performance is a masterpiece of finely shaded acting, one that will long rank as Russell's finest contribution to the artistry of the screen.

"The Lake of Sweet Memories" Furnishes Movie Setting

Beautiful Lake Tahoe, Nature's Wonderland, is the Scene of Outdoor Action in "The Valley of Tomorrow"—Most Grippingly Dramatic Special Feature of the Year, with William Russell and All-Star Cast.

"There is about Tahoe a silent witchery that works in your blood. When I forget it, my heart will be still."

So confesses a famous traveler. And everybody who has experienced the joy of acquaintance with this fairy lake, with its background of snow-clad mountains and its foreground of pine-clad headlands, will be inclined to voice a hearty amen.

No wonder it is popular with the makers of photoplays de luxe! The latest big screen achievement to claim Tahoe as its locale is "The Valley of Tomorrow."

Drama of Conflicts

"The Valley of Tomorrow!" is fittingly described as "a drama of conflicts," for it traces the stupendous struggle that is staged in the soul of a man when love comes to a clash with hatred—when the payment of a debt of personal gratitude is complicated by an obligation of clan vengeance—when obedience to a new ideal is hampered by the grip of an ancient tradition—when desire and duty point to converging paths.

Truckee's Two Streets

"The ancient and honorable charge of illicit distilling," according to the titles, was the wherefore of Dabney Morgan's little vacation in jail at Heaven's Gate. It all happened in "The Valley of Tomorrow" (see the program of the ...... theatre for further information), and Dabney Morgan, y'understand, is the hero you see imitated by big William Russell.

"The Valley of Tomorrow"

rom the Story by Stephen Fox—Directed by Emmett J. Flynn—Filmed in Nature's Wonderland at Lake Tahoe

A gripping drama of conflicts: hate t war with love—vengeance with ratitude—old traditions with new leals.

Enacted by William Russell and a emarkable cast of players.

IF

—a man knocked at the door of our heart and you knew him for the nemy who had shot your brother—ould you let him in?

—a woman tugged at your heartrings and you knew her for the sis r of the blackguard who had beayed your own little sister—would ou bid her welcome?

—the miscreant whom every tradition of your house commanded you to kill was suddenly revealed as the very man to whom you owed your life—could you sweep just vengeance aside for gratitude and human charity?

It is conflicting emotions and obligations such as these that make human drama. Only after the difficult slopes of the Mountains of Yesterday have been scaled does one reach the serenity of the Valley of Tomorrow.

William Russell, as a red-blooded man of the mountains, scores a triumph of emotional acting. With him are such admirable supporting players as Mary Thurman, Pauline Curley, Harvey Clark, Fred M. Malatesta, Frank Brownlee and Frank Clark.

Action—emotion — pathos — romance — quaint comedy. A play that will thrill you from first to last.

CATCH LINES FOR PROGRAM AND DISPLAYS

An epic of mountain justice warring with love.

Not a society play nor a pretty little love story, but tense, gripping, RED-BLOODED DRAMA that takes you out of yourself and makes you really LIVE the story as you see it on the screen.

A vital, stirring drama of love and vengeance, played against the most picturesque background in all America — the wonderful region of Lake Tahoe, the jewel of the Sierras.

If you put red-blooded action, touched with strong emotion, above silly sentimentality or slap-stick funmaking, "THE VALLEY OF TOMORROW" will win your vote.

Prison bars could not hold a man who had sworn to avenge his sister's dishonor.

A drama of conflicts: the battle between LOVE and HATRED — between the narrow code of YESTERDAY and the broad, humanitarian ideas of TODAY — between the demands of traditional VENGEANCE and the generous impulses of a heart big enough for HUMAN CHARITY.

The absorbing story of two women —one a stormy-eyed, passionate daughter of the South, putting vengeance above even love itself; the other a frail slip of a mountain lass, putting love above all else — even her own honor. For both of them, tragedy — for one of them, peace-crowned love in the end.

Real drama, as big and breezy and genuine as the glorious panorama of mountain, lake and forest against which the action takes place.

Action as swift as the rushing waterfalls that lend magic to its outdoor settings. Heart-interest as profound as lovely Lake Tahoe, on whose shores the scenes were filmed. A theme as superb as the towering Sierras that supply majestic backgrounds no studio could ever fake.

Was she right or wrong to love the man who had sworn to kill her brother?

Could a man who has been brought up to obey the law of "eye for eye" give his heart to a woman who has tried to take his life?

Dramatic suspense — a double romance — danger and thrills — self-indulgence and self-sacrifice — the conflict of emotions — quaint comedy and delicate pathos — these are some of the ingredients that make "THE VALLEY OF TOMORROW" appreciated screen fare for exacting picturegoers.

New Typhoon Fan Office

Chattanooga Firm One of Recent Contractors; Many Chicago Firms Equipped

THE Signal Amusement Co., of Chattanooga, which operates one of the biggest chains of theatres in the south, has contracted with the Typhoon Fan Co. to install a Typhoon Cooling System in the Tivoli theatre, the big new house now in course of construction at Chattanooga, and Pres. Ernst Glantzberg of the Typhoon Company was in Chicago last week conferring with the architects in charge of building the Tivoli in regard to details of the installation.

"The Typhoon Cooling System which we will install in the Tivoli will change the air in the entire house in one minute, assuring the audience of that refreshing breeze so much desired in hot summer weather and in winter can be regulated so that with a slower change of air perfect ventilation will be assured," Mr. Glantzberg said in talking of the contract. "The Signal Amusement Company already is using our system in their fifteen theatres where it has proved of inestimable value, giving a plentiful supply of that life giving media, pure air, and being a real patronage stimulator.

"Progressive southern showmen were the first to recognize the value of the Typhoon Cooling System, as their hot summer weather made theatres which were equipped with it sure winners and the Saenger Amusement Co. were prompt to install the system in their big chain of houses, and today practically every New Orleans theatre is equipped. Northern theatre men also have come to realize the value of a system which not only provides perfect ventilation in winter but assures their audiences of comfortable coolness in summer and we are working to the limit to keep pace with the orders we are receiving.

"Among the Chicago theatres which are being equipped with Typhoon Cooling Systems are Lubliner & Trinz 3,300 seat house at Kedzie and Madison and the new Stratford theatre at 63rd and Union Sts. A system also is being installed in the new Rialto theatre at Louisville.

"The office which we recently opened at Chicago in charge of Messrs. Wilson and Gleason is already proving a big help to our many customers in the central west as we are now able to give them quick service."

Sherry is one of the pioneers of the screen having played for the silver sheet since 1909. Six years of this time he was with Thomas Ince, when that producer was in charge of the western studios of the New York Motion Picture Company. Sherry played in Neilan's first production, "The River's End."

It is now definitely stated that the first release for Mildred Harris Chaplin on the First National program will be the film just completed entitled "Polly of the Storm Country" in which she has Emory Johnson, Charlotte Burton and Mildred Moore as principal supports. Miss Pickford's first big production was "Tess of the Storm Country" and Miss Talmadge appeared in "Secret of the Storm Country." "Polly of the Storm Country" is to be published in book form and issued simultaneously with the release of the picture. PRESS AGENTS ORGANIZE

Continuing in true form of the noble order of press agentry, a smudgey sheet titled "The Mouth Organ," which was done by a mimeograph process, brings us the information that there is a new organization self-styled "Studio Publicists' Association." Previous meetings have been held, when a committee on organization was named. The officers elected are: President, C. Walter Huntington, of Frank Keenan Productions; vice-president, Ham Beall, Exhibitors' Herald; treasurer, Al Rizzley, Bull's Eye; secretary, Emily Squires, Motion Picture Magazine. Editor, Mouth Organ, Ted Taylor, of Metro.

The first principle of the organization is set forth as follows: "To strengthen recognition of publicity as a legitimate, dignified, vital force in molding public opinion of persons, things or ideas"; while the third is, "To eliminate publicity faking, which reacts to the detriment of all affected by publicity."

The reason for organization, the Mouth Organ sets forth, is that boiler makers, undertakers, dish washers, ribbon clerks and others have amalgamated.

INSIDE PUTTEE FACTS

HOKUM staff went forth en masse formation to garner information pertaining to the why and wherefor of puttees, and what do you think we (speaking editorially) found—[done for suspense]

Directors, actors, scenario writers, assistant cameramen, assistant directors, and a property man were all wearing puttees.

Up until "that night," or "the next day," as they say in sub titles, we had believed puttees had been designed exclusively for the use of directors. The various sights took the heart out of every one of the organization, and so the quest for information was postponed until a rainy day.

This Charming Study of the Selznick Star By Bradley Studios

Here is a new photograph of the veteran director, R. A. Walsh, who is now working on a new script for an R. A. Walsh production

Walsh Works in Woodlands

R. A. Walsh, now head of his own productions, and associated with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation releasing through the Realart Pictures Corporation, has just returned from a week's sojourn in the woodlands upstate. He skipped away from old New York, accompanied by Harold Horne, his assistant producing director, and Earle Browne, scenario writer, to work out ideas for his first superfeature under his new contract.

"Uninterrupted by office details, I accomplished more work in my week's stay in the woods than I could have done had I remained in New York City a month," reported Director Walsh.

When greeted as he stepped off the train, R. A. Walsh was all smiles. He has been working on an original script which will eventually materialize, it is said, into a big production, his first screen creation under the Mayflower and Realart contract.

Mr. Walsh will make another retreat to the woods some time next week. He has learned from his week's experience up-state that nature's solitude is just the place to work out big ideas. The exact location of Mr. Walsh's woodland home is known to only a few of his intimate co-workers. It is understood the bungalow is five miles from the nearest telephone or telegraph connections.

Olga Petrova, who has been making an extensive vaudeville tour, has canceled the rest of her Eastern time and exchanged it for Western time, as she is particularly anxious to play California, Colorado and Kansas. She doesn't say why. Before starting for California, she will return to New York for one week to arrange for the publication of a novel: "The Harlot's House," on which she is now engaged. Several publishers are said to be negotiating with her for a book of poems, one act plays, and the short stories now appearing in Ainslee's, Smart Set, etc. A copy of her song "The Road to Romany," for which she wrote both lyric and music, reached our desk recently, with a nice picture of Mme. and a figurative gypsy wagon and camp on the front cover.

Directing—as Gillstrom Sees It

IF Arvid Gillstrom were to direct as speedily as he dresses, he would probably turn out a seven-reel special a week. We had an appointment with Mr. Gillstrom at the Astor for twelve o'clock. We waited the usual length of time that one waits for persons to come down stairs, no longer, and when Mr. Gillstrom appeared, he said:

"No one called me this morning, and I was sound asleep when they announced you. Won't you come in and have some breakfast with me?"

All we could say was that we wished we could be called at twelve, and make our appearance, entirely clothed and in our right mind at twelve-six. We set about ascertaining whether Mr. Gillstrom does everything so rapidly. We decided not.

"A good director must have infinite patience" he told us. "Any one can act for a picture, if someone who knows how will take the time and trouble to make the player lose all self-consciousness and really live the part he is portraying. The ideal way to take an important bit of action, is to have no one on the set but the director and the player. The director talks quietly and dispassionately as I am talking to you now, telling the player the story and describing the feelings of the person whose character he is to assume, until he forgets himself entirely, is perfectly oblivious of everything around him, and realizes only the emotions of the character. Then, as he goes through the part, the director, unnoticed by him, signals to the cameraman, who has been waiting off stage, to "shoot," and the scene is taken, while the player believes that he is still rehearsing. When he sees the film run off, he can hardly believe that it is really himself he is watching. It's no easy matter, you know, to extract real tears from a vigorous, sophisticated, grown-up man."

"What does it require from the director?" we asked, "intuitive knowledge of psychology, or the powers of a hypnotist?"

Mr. Gillstrom shrugged his shoulders. "I don't know," he answered, "but I know that some directors can do it, and I am sure that the remarkable acting that was done in the picture that I consider the best the screen has yet produced, was accomplished in just that way."

"The director must have some knowledge of photography, too," he continued, "he must know, at least, what the camera will do and what it won't. For instance, if you arrange to have several hundred extras on an outdoor location in some inaccessible place, on a certain day, and you arrive only to find it cloudy and threatening, and your cameraman tells you that you can't possibly get anything worth looking at in such light, you've got to be able to tell him just how much slower to time his machine, so that it will photograph. And then you've got to know how much faster to make the action, how much more rapidly pour people must walk, etc., to make the film look natural when it's run off."

"Well, we've always thought it was the director who should get credit for a good production," we declared, "and now we're more convinced than ever."

"No, the director can do nothing without a story," Mr. Gillstrom maintained. "I've been writing my own for the last several years, but it's never safe to do that without trying them out on someone first. I don't mean by asking people whether they like the story you have just told them or not, they say 'yes' of course, but I mean by watching their faces while you tell it. Then you get a true answer as to their interest, and unless you do that, you are apt to overestimate the importance of certain details and your picture will drag. That's the danger of a director's producing his own stories."

"What sort of stories do you like best?" we inquired.

"Those with deep human interest, and good melodramas," he replied readily, "and I believe the best source of material today is the Bible. Yes, I'm perfectly serious. The Bible is being read more today than it ever has,

Drama is the keynote of the Goldwyn productions featuring Pauline Frederick. This shows Miss Frederick, her director Frank Lloyd and cameraman Jennings watching a scene at the Culver City studio.

Director's Strange Method

Every director has an individual method of getting results, but P. Thad Volkman, assistant director to Fred W Sittenham in the new Reeve and Grey serial, "The Mystery Mind," starring J. Robert Pauline, recently used one method that is unique. He brought a pot of glue into service.

Volkman's latest assignment was tc make common house rats act in a big scene in "The Mystery Mind." Rats gnaw the ropes holding a church bel that drops through the ceiling and narrowly misses killing the heroine, Violet MacMillan.

"They don't speak your language Pete," Mr. Grey told him.

"Then I'll have to learn theirs,' Pete replied. He persisted, coaxing shoving, bodily lifting the rats intc position, until it was accidently revealed that they loved painter's gluc They would follow a stick dipped in i and voraciously gnaw the heavy rope when some was placed under the knots

"You have the patience of Job," Mı Reeve observed, when the camera wa stopped for the twentieth time to wai for the rats to begin work again.

"Huh, this is easy. You should tr to handle a bunch of kiddies. Bac in the zenith of the Lubin days w screened several of the old melc dramas with kiddies playing all th parts. We did one where the childre were made up for Zulas, and whe they cried—the make-up seemed t frighten them—they washed it all o their faces. "Moonshiners" Arreste Beware—Directors!

The taking of a motion picture scer showing a "moonshine" whisky st running in full blast, was given a dr matic and unexpected tinge of reali recently near Dahlonega, Georg when a United States deputy marsh who had mistaken the spectacle for t real thing, appeared on the spot.

The entire company of screen pla ers was gathered in by the long arm the government for alleged violati of the revenue laws. Instead of ho ing the entire aggregation, howev Deputy Ben Landers, who made t raid, compromised by entering ca against the four persons who seen most involved.

These were Irma Harrison, lead lady of "The Daughter of Devil Da a typical mountain drama based or novel by a Georgia author; James T bell, juvenile; Frank Kirby, direct and Captain C. Hamilton Cook, bı ness representative. The defenda released on their own recognizai were ordered to appear for an ea preliminary hearing before Uni States Commissioner Rufus D. Bal of Gainesville, Ga. The quartet w confident that the charges would dismissed, because, while the still a genuine one, it was not being t for the manufacture of real liquoı the time of the raid.

French Actress Here to Enter Pictures

THE fascination that American films hold for European players of note eems to be growing more and more resistible. Today we discovered that aby Marcy, whose name is said to be amiliar to all those acquainted with he theatre in France and Russia, is mong the most recent arrivals in New ork. Miss Marcy has already received several offers from well known lm companies here, who, on account her European reputation, are ready have her commence work at once, ut she is naturally anxious to make he best possible affiliation, and has igned no contract as yet.

Miss Marcy began her career as a hild eleven years ago and has played n legitimate productions before mos. f the royal families of Europe. Among er greatest successes was "Le Petit afe," produced at the Palais Royal in Paris and other triumphs in the same ity include "Rubicon," and that drama lear to the heart of every real actress, L'Aiglon." During the three years prior to the outbreak of the world war, Miss Marcy was seen in all the best known plays of Tolstoy, Maxim Gorky, and Dosfvjewskui, which were produced in Petrograd before the Czar and the Imperial family.

When France, her native country, declared war, Miss Marcy sold the ewels that had been given her as marks of approbation by famous personages before whom she had played, bought an ambulance, equipped a nursing unit of her own, and devoted her ntire time and service to this unit for he duration of the war. After the rmistice was signed, she decided that she would pay a long looked for visit o this country, and, accompanied by er small son, she reached the metropo- is about ten days ago. She expects to give her son all the advantages of an American education, while she gives he American public the benefit of her xceptional dramatic ability and the echnique acquired through her long xperience on the most famous and xacting stages of Europe.

The most striking thing about Miss Marcy is the mobility of her facial expression, which she possesses in such marked degree that, although her knowledge of English was limited to hat acquired since her arrival in this country, she was perfectly able to convey to us her keenest likes and dislikes. She is full of enthusiasm and delightful to watch, and has a vivid and noticeable personality. She should be as successful as ever she hopes to be.

and clever writers are modernizing its stories into some of the best films we have."

"In spite of the fact that it's hard to get the most interesting ones past the censor, as the facetious ones say," we remarked, but Mr. Gillstrom didn't seem to think that objection worthy of comment.

When questioned as to his plans for the immediate future, he told us nothing definite. He returned recently from England, but he has given up all idea of going back, although he has had some enticing offers, he assured us, because he objects to paying an income tax to two countries. He insisted that he had succeeded in retaining exactly one-sixth of his year's salary, and we agreed with him that under those circumstances, it seemed better to stay at home.

Peggy Shanor Dislikes "Vamp"

This statuesque beauty is Peggy Shanor, who is playing with J. Robert Pauline in "The Mystery Mind," a Supreme Picture

"I don't know why the public persist in calling any woman character in a play or picture who happens to have red blood, brains or allurement a 'vamp.' The word irritates me excessively," recently declared Peggy Shanor, who is playing "Vera Collins" in the new serial "The Mystery Mind," by Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey.

"Managers and directors seem to have me slated for 'vamps,' but really I've played very few," Miss Shanor continued. "I've done better and more interesting work in other characters, yet the minute my name is mentioned some one says 'vamp.'"

Vera in "The Mystery Mind" is said to be certainly more than a "vamp," for no ordinary vamp part ever called for such versatility and character acting as Reeve and Grey have allotted to Vera Collins, it is stated.

That Miss Shanor doesn't look like a very wicked creature is evident from the fact that Beb-ben, the Roumanian impressionistic artist, is reported to have asked her to pose for the Madonna's head and face in his latest painting.

"In the prologue of this serial, says Miss Shanor, "I play a maiden-priestess of a South-American head-hunter tribe, whose soul is transmigrated into a serpent before I am reincarnated as Vera. In the story itself I am by turns the woman leader of a band of crooks, a society girl, a sculptor's model, and a telephone lineman: I haven't heard what further disguises I adopt."

As the society girl Miss Shanor had to wear a blonde wig and the Madonna resemblance was most marked then. She doesn't know what she will be before the serial is finished, but she likes character work, it is stated, and would like to play a different one in each episode.

Here and There

Edward J. Montagne has just completed the script of "The Law-Bringers," which will serve as a starring vehicle for Ralph Ince under the Selznick banner. Mr. Montagne has written and picturized over 100 features during the past few years. He made twenty-five adaptations in 1919 alone, twelve of which have already been released, as follows: "Out Yonder," "The Combat," "The Lion and the Mouse," "Beating the Odds," "The Man Who Won," "A Stitch in Time," "Too Many Crooks," "The Girl Woman," "The Darkest Hour," "Fighting Destiny," "Beauty-Proof," "Sue of Bolinas Plains," "The Human Desire," and "Cupid Forecloses."

Little Bobbie Connelly is playing under the direction of Frank Borzage in the International production of "Humoresque," Fannie Hurst's story which was adapted for the screen by Frances Marion. Bobbie's leading lady is Miriam Batista, a tiny black-haired daughter of Italy, who bids fair to prove herself an actress of exceptional ability. Miriam was seen on the legitimate stage during the brief run of John Cort's "Whirlwind."

Gladys Valerie's dressing room at the Victor Studio is the scene of a most interesting tea party daily, when the members of the cast of the new Schomer-Ross production gather for a cordial cup. As most of the cast have at one time or another been associated with the operatic field, Miss Valerie's teas are usually supplemented by a delightful musical program. It seems too bad that they are so exclusive, and never have any audience at all.

Double Print Quota is Given

Universal Branches Will Hereafter Have More Prints on All Pictures

EXHIBITORS will be interested in the announcement of Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal that hereafter all Universal exchanges will be furnished with double the number of prints on all productions which have been sent heretofore. In commenting upon this change of policy, Mr. Berman said that while it would cost his company thousands of dollars, it would be a big advantage to the exhibitor as it will permit the various exchanges to give earlier bookings.

"Under the old arrangement," said Mr. Berman, "it meant that many exhibitors in the smaller cities were obliged to wait weeks, and sometimes months for a booking, because there were no prints available. The idea of concentrating on the big city exhibitor, and letting the exhibitors in the smaller towns wait is all wrong in my estimation. Of course, it is beneficial to both small town exhibitor as well as the producer to get bookings first in the key cities. Exhibitors in the smaller towns watch carefully the result of a showing in the bigger towns near by, and they often are determined in making their contracts, by the success or failure of a picture in the key city. But after a picture has been shown in a big town, and has proven to be a money maker, the small town exhibitor immediately writes or wires for a date, if he has made a contract for the picture, or if he has booked it wants to know how soon a play date can be given. Naturally he wants to play it as soon as possible in order to get the maximum benefit from the advertising given the picture in the big town, while that advertising is still fresh in the minds of his patrons. With these additional prints our exchanges will be in a position to serve just twice as many exhibitors as heretofore, in half the time.

Feist Arrives in St. Louis

Sales Manager of Goldwyn Pictures Is Welcomed By Leading Exhibitors

THE Goldwyn Pictures reports that the proverbial glad-hand was in evidence at the reception accorded Felix Feist, vice-president and manager of sales for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, by the leading exhibitors of St. Louis when the Goldwyn executive arrived on his coast-to-coast tour last week. In keeping with the purpose of his trip, which is to meet as many exhibitors as possible and get first-hand information on conditions as they exist in every territory, Mr. Feist spent much of his time at the various theatres of the city.

"My strongest impression of St. Louis," said Mr. Feist, "is the decided effort on the part of the exhibitors here to improve the presentation of their pictures. The change since my last visit is so great that it cannot help but be noted. Based on expressions of opinion from many exhibitors, I judge that while it is not their aim to build theatres larger than the Capitol in New York City, they aim to keep abreast of the times in every effort to place their theatres on the highest artistic plane.

"The extensive new theatre construction here gives me a reflection of a very optimistic attitude on the part of exhibitors, all of whom report business conditions to be excellent. I have talked to exhibitors both large and small, in St. Louis, and have carefully noted their opinions as to the type of productions which these managers desire. The Goldwyn policy has always been to weigh carefully the opinion of the exhibitor, and this will be even more in evidence, if possible, during the coming season."

IN THE STUDIOS

George Beban wishes that Mary Pickford didn't have to bother with law suits and things, because it upsets his arrangements, and the fact that Miss Pickford won didn't do him a bit of good. Mr. Beban engaged Helen Jerome Eddy to play opposite him in his forthcoming production, "One Man In a Million," with the understanding that Miss Eddy would finish the part upon which she was then at work with the Pickford company before starting with Mr. Beban. Miss Pickford left for New York, and Mr. Beban waited. Only recently was Mr. Beban able to start work in earnest on his "One Man In a Million," the first production to be staged by his own producing company, which will be distributed and exploited by Sol Lesser.

New Orleans is supposed to be dry, but there is a certain famous French restaurant where the pass word will get you something worthwhile. A local motion picture business man gave a card of introduction to Percy Marmont, while Alice Joyce's company was filming the Derby scenes of "The Sporting Duchess," and Mr. Marmont forthwith invited G. V. Seyffertitz and another member of the company to have dinner with him that evening. He presented his card to the proprietor, and the proprietor in turn told their waiter to "take care of the party." Marmont, planning to order some claret, asked for San Julian; and the party waited eagerly for a real treat, until the waiter appeared with—St. Julien soup.

News Notes

Max Mayer is making a change in business. According to a well founded rumor that persists in sticking around, the M. J. Wohl and Mayer has yet been able to spread the fame and name of Wohlights over the greater part of the world.

Saw F. H. Richardson in the elevator a few mornings ago. Richardson of the Handbook and "go-devil," you know. Unfortunately he wasn't headed for the NEWS office.

Honestly now, when you consider hat the poor projectionist has to look it all the films at every show whether ie likes them or not, can you blame iim when he fills some of them full of unch-holes?

The poor projectionist is the only nan in the audience who has to watch he show and can't pick up his hat and oat and leave before the end.

Last Week We Met—A. R. Dennington

DO you know "Denny"? If you have ever had anything to do with Mazda projection we are sure you have met and know the man. He is so busy with the problems in illumination that are constantly thrown at him that it is difficult to see where he finds time for recreation. But he does somehow—which is all the more to his credit.

Arthur E. Dennington's early life was spent on a farm in western Pennsylvania. His training in the various R's, such as reactace, resistance, together with those of reading, writing and 'rithmatic was obtained in a typical red school house (which in his particular case, we believe was painted white) but otherwise was the orthodox school house featured in the education of many Americans.

Master Dennington in those days was not in need of any of the artificial exercises such as are common in gymnasiums of present day schools. Instead he developed his muscles by natural means—pitching hay, digging potatoes, sawing wood, etc. He was not given the chance to enter golf tournaments or tennis matches. Neither was his food or his warmth dependent on the country's freedom from strikes and labor's observance of the 8-hour day.

In due time Mr. Dennington taught school and invested the proceeds of such labor in a course in electrical engineering at Pennsylvania State College, graduating in 1903. He received the John W. White fellowship and joined the teaching forces at the college, having charge of the electrical engineering laboratories. He was given the degree of electrical engineer in 1905. In 1907 he went with the International Correspondence Schools, and spent more than a year in London editing text books in electrical engineering.

After returning to the United States, Mr. Dennington became connected in 1912 with the Engineering Department of the Westinghouse Lamp Co., and was closely associated with the development of gas filled incandescent lamps. In the year of 1913 he made up some of the first lamps designed especially for the projection of motion pictures. These were tried out by the Precision Machine Co., and resulted later in some lamps being supplied for experimental use at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. These tests proved the possibility of using an incandescent lamp as a light source for the projection of motion pictures, though for a period of about two years very little development work was done. Realizing that the development of the lamp was but one step in the problem of successful projection by incandescent lamps and that the arc lamp mechanism was unsuitable for the new light source, Mr. Dennington turned his attention to the development of a lamphouse mechanism and perfected a design whereby the lamp can be perfectly focused if desired outside of the optical system of the projector and then quickly inserted in the correct position. This enables lamps to be changed almost instantly in case of need and insures correct adjustment of the lamp in all cases. Mr. Dennington also developed the lamp with two rolls of filament coils, the back row of coils filling the spaces between the coils of the front row. This design is specially suited to projector lamps of high wattage.

Mazda projection as applied to its rightful field is coming. And when it arrives to stay the credit for making it possible will be divided among a few men—and one of them will be A. R. Dennington.

uch Attention Has Been Given to Small Things at the New Alhambra Theatre in Toronto

VITH the stage perfectly set, so to speak, and the public well primed for its reception, the Alhambra theatre was recently opened in To-o. The theatre built to seat 1,400, and yet not apying a large lot, has been well designed both o architectural and color treatment, so that the ing of confinement which might otherwise be arent has been eliminated. Toronto should proud of this new addition to her collection notion picture palaces.

1 shows a view of the auditorium taken the screen. It should be noticed that the in the center section have been diminished umber as the screen is approached. This is xcellent idea, as it allows the side sections to brought in toward the center of the house, eby improving the quality of the picture as from the outside seats. Another excellent ure as shown in this illustration is the width he aisles. Besides improving the safety of the ling and increasing the convenience of the ons the wide aisles accentuate the width of the torium so as to make it seem wider than it is lly.

g. 2 is a view of the stage setting as seen from balcony. The treatment of the arch is simple efficient. At the left and right are windows grill work which relieve the right angles of arch.

rt of the grand dome is shown in Fig. 5, as well as a detail of the balcony layout. Two rows of loge seats are provided at the front of the balcony. The grand dome itself is illustrated in Fig. 3. This dome is located so that it may be used for the lighting effects. In it are four different electrical circuits of lamps, amber, red, blue and white controlled through theatre dimmers. It is thus possible to suffuse the theatre in any tint or tone of flood lighting desired.

Reference to Fig. 5 will show the smaller dome that hangs in the center of the large one. This is made of colored glass, and hangs about four feet below the ceiling surface. Like the grand dome it is equipped with four color circuits, on dimmers. The entire sky effect follows the style of the Adam period.

A. J. Lourie, manager

On the mezzanine floor are found more attractive features. The illustration, Fig. 3, is of the lounging room, furnished with comfortable wicker chairs finished like the walls in battleship gray. Ferns and other potted plants are planted about the room with an eye for effect. Old rose is used for the fine edge trimming throughout the room and equipment. On this same floor is a ladies' parlor with an attendant constantly in charge and a smoking-room for men. There is a telephone for the use of patrons, and a check room where wraps and parcels are checked without charge.

Mr. A. J. Laurie, manager of the Alhambra, is a wideawake showman, and is the man responsible for many of the innovations in this new house. As an example, he has devised a system for coloring his pictures during special scenes such as a parade in "The Red Lantern." The lighting fixtures are concealed in the canopy over the stage. There are three colors to be used, red, blue and amber. Just how it is done, Mr. Laurie does not wish to say at this time, as he is working on several modifications of the idea that will materially improve it. The draperies of the stage are grayish blue, the canopy that covers the top of the stage is of white gauze with a blue lining back of it. Back of this canopy are located a number of groups of lights. One circuit is used only for the purpose of giving color to the draperies while the picture is on the screen. Another circuit colors the canopy while the short subjects are being shown.

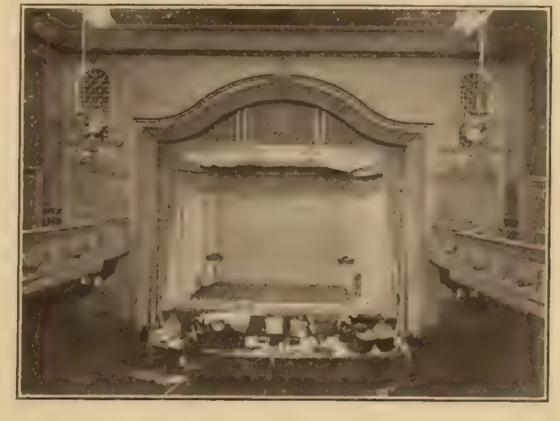

Fig. 2—View from balcony

In answer to a request for details of lighting during the showing of his special features, Mr. Laurie said: "On pictures like 'Broken Blossoms' and 'The Red Lantern,' I colored the picture and kept the rest of my circuits going. And at one time in 'The Red Lantern' I had the footlights burning when the parade started, and kept them on for fully five minutes. I had the lights covered with a silk material to remove all glare."

To enable the orchestra to be fully lighted during the overture, the lights are so arranged on one circuit that they shine only within the limits of the orchestra pit, and do not bother the patrons sitting in the front seats or affect the picture on the screen.

The carpets throughout the theatre are dark blue in color. The chairs are upholstered in dark blue with a gray finish. The finish is flat without gloss. All heating radiators are concealed behind ornamental grill work. At the back of the theatre and on both sides of the arch in the balcony are lattice work panels. These panels are backed with silk, and through them shine different colored lights. The vases noticed in front of the grill work in Figs. 2 and 5 are made of plaster and are also illuminated.

All paneling in the auditorium and balcony is done in old rose tapestry paper, while the rest of the theatre is a combination of gray, ivory, red gold and blue. As has been mentioned previously, the note throughout has followed the Adam period.

Carpets are used in all the aisles in the lobby, and wherever people walk. Box lights are used to light the aisles, and make the pathways safe for patrons, the lights being placed on the uprights of the seats, one light being placed on each fifth seat. At the back of the house a plate glass wind shield has been placed for the protection of people sitting in the back of the auditorium. There are two ticket booths, one in the lobby and one on the sidewalk line, thereby making it possible to handle crowds without congestion.

There is an interesting point of construction concerned with the stage. The footlights are placed about four feet back of the line of the proscenium arch, which can be noted in Fig. 2. In addition to placing the orchestra pit further into the stage this arrangement also allows the installation of a set of stairs leading from the stage to the pit and auditorium floor.

The stage is thirty-eight feet deep wide at the arch, forty feet high and twenty feet in depth. The screen is set ten feet back from the footlights. The Acme Gold Fibre screen is set back ten feet from the footlights. In the projection room, two complete Simplex equipments are used with Bausch & Lomb lenses.

As has been mentioned before in this article, Mr. Laurie is a real manager. At no time was this better evident than during the weeks preceding the opening of the Alhambra. A comprehensive c paign was carried out to acquaint the people the theatre itself. The illuminated sign whic shown in one of the illustrations was used a teaser. Part of it was painted and allowed remain uncompleted. Later on the other half completed and on the opening night the lette was placed on it as shown. Ten of these simple telling signs were erected at various parts of town.

Just previous to the opening invitations sent out to a selected list. On arrival at the t tre each "first nighter" was given an inaug program and a carnation. Writing tables were plied with correspondence cards and envelopes ably engraved with the name of the theatre at top. The program for the first night was a booklet in which besides the various numbers t were also found a description of the theatre's forts and advantages, calling attention to its s and purity of air.

The officials of the Alhambra are: Manager,
Laurie; Music Director, Benedick Clarke;
of Projection, Joseph Harris; Electrician, Go Greeniaus.

Equipment Operating Projection, Question Answered

A Projectionist's Examination Should Cover Thoroughly a Wide Range of Subjects

According to Marvin H. Thoreau of Victoria, B. C., Who Submits a List of Necessary Questions

IN my opinion the following are some of the subjects on which the applicants for a Projectionist's license should be examined.

Given a set of test lamps he should be able to give the kind of current (A. C., D. C., 1, 2 or 3 Phase Edison 3 wire, etc.) and the approximate voltage of any circuit shown him. Carrying capacity and insulation of wires. The fusing of circuits. The action and care of Rheostats, Choke Coils, two Coil Transformers, Auto-Transformers and Mercury Arc-Rectifiers. Principles of D. C. generation and commutation. The methods of voltage control. Various windings. (Shunt-Series, etc.)

Marvin H. Thoreau

Fitting adjustment and care of brushes. Care of commutator. Testing armature for "opens," "shorts" and "grounds." Lubrication of bearings.

Adjustment and care of motor generators D. C., A. C., 1, 2 and 3 phase) and starting of same.

Capacities of generators, transformers, rheostats and rectifiers. Calculation of resistance necessary to give stated amperage at the arc on a line of known voltage. Various methods of connecting several rheostats (series, multiple, etc.) on a single circuit. Ventilation of rheostats. Location of switches and fuseing of arc circuits. Size of asbestos leads and terminals in arc lamp. Care of carbon-holders and terminals. Testing for grounds in lamp-house. Carbon adjustments and alignment. Kinds of carbons (A. C. and D. C.) and sizes used on various amperages. Crater angles. Location of current registering device (ammeter and voltmeter).

Cleaning, mounting and spacing of condensers. Prevention and cause of breakage. Choosing of focal length to suit conditions. Testing for defects and focal length. Types of condensers. (Plano Convex-Meniscus, etc.) Position of lamp house. Distance from condensers to aperture.

Selecting of objective lens. (Diameters and quality). Calculating focal length necessary to get a picture of stated size at a given distance. Cleaning, assembling, focussing, etc. Stopping down. Results of crooked lens jacket. Testing for distortion, aberation, etc.

Location of revolving shutter. Adapting shutter to fit local conditions. Cause and elimination of travel-ghost and flicker.

Care, adjustment and lubrication of intermittent movement. Adjustment of aperture tension. Adjustment of sprocket idlers. Alignment of magazines and sprockets. General care, adjustment and lubrication of mechanism and speed c Care and adjustment of take-up friction. S projection room for given amount of equi Location and size of ports. Fire shutters an trol of same. Location of incandescent lam and motor feed outlets. Location of boar trolling house lights. Ventilation of pro room. Effects of glass in ports. Installat same.

Care and adjustment of stereopticon an light.

Splicing, cleaning, rewinding and genera of film.

Size of screen necessary under given conc

Reflection of various surfaces. Angle proj

Methods of extinguishing film fires. U care of various safety appliances used in th jection room. General fire prevention.

Some, no doubt, will say that a proje should not be examined on some of these s saying that they are part of the work of th jection Engineers and Architects.

In the near future I hope to bring fo reason for all the foregoing questions a plain in detail what I think the applicants projectionist license should be required to before being given a license.

President Campe of Society of Motion Pictur Engineers Sends New Year Greetings to Mem

Suggests Lines of Action to be Taken and Urges Greater Activity by Entire Membership

THE officers of your Society are using this means of expressing to you their wishes for a Happy New Year and continued success throughout the year. They also wish to thank you individually for your co-operation which has placed the Society on the high plane on which it now stands.

"We trust that each of you will watch for the many opportunities which present themselves during the year and to offer to the Society that which you feel will be beneficial to the members.

"We are becoming more progressive and our results are now looked upon as an authority on technical questions pertaining to the motion picture industry. Orders for our transactions are being received from all ends of the World and before our next meeting our membership will include engineers from Europe, who have expressed a desire to unite with us and have requested application blanks.

"What is the purpose of our Society? It is to promote and encourage a knowledge of the motion picture science; to provide facilities for the study of and the exchange of information on motion picture technical problems, and to raise the status of those engaged in he technical end of the motion picture industry.

"There must be some excuse for the existence of our Society. We cannot continue to meet twice a year, especially during such busy times as we have been passing through since the formation of the Society, unless there is something of value to be obtained. You, who have been attending our meetings, know what benefits are derived. For the same reason, you have an inducement to offer to others to become affiliated with us. Our present membership is 80 in number—in good standing. I know at least six or eight who are now ready to sign applications for presentation at our next meeting. A Handy Reference B

IN the beginning a hand book was what i implies. But probably under the stress petition wherein each succeeding author it necessary to add more to the data the h gradually expanded until it resembled m encyclopedia. Then as usual instead of ha book in one's pocket when needed it was h some unknown place.

In the motion picture industry there ha been a need for a real pocket sized h Rules and regulations, tables of wire siz capacities and many other facts are of needed on short notice. At last there has such a book in the right size and contai necessary data. Mr. James R. Camer know to many in the business is the au compiler of the little book.

The Pocket Reference Book for Proj and Managers, as the book is titled, is 3 5¾" high and about ½" thick. It is l flexible imitation leather with its title st gold on the cover, and contains 150 pag formation.

one and two machines. These pages are exceedingly valuable.

The principal parts of standard machines are then described with directions for their adjustments and replacement. Lens tables, optical properties of various reflecting materials, voltage drop tables and conversion tables occupy several more pages.

What will seem to many the most valuable parts of the reference book take up pages 80 to 108. Here are given a digest of the rules of the New York department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity which apply to motion pictures and also excerpts from the motion picture statutes of a number of states throughout the country. This information will be of great value to those projectionists who through the nature of their work are required to pass from one state into another. In the remaining pages are given a list of the principal studios, laboratories and equipment manufacturers and at the very end of the book a list of the cities in the United States with a statement of the voltage, cycles and phases of current furnished in each city. A complete index is given on the last page so that any table or bit of data may be found instantly.

About the best recommendation that can be given the book is to say that its purchase price does not in any way indicate its wonderful value to the projectionist wherever he may be. As a handy reference book there is none other available that can approach it for completeness and availibility of data.

Sam Kaplan, Simplex Expert, Is Man of Hour

AN inside story of the recent dinner tendered to Secretary of the Interior Lane by the Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has just come to light which not only shows how hard it is to discourage a really energetic man, but also illustrates the many vicissitudes encountered by those attempting to follow the mazes of the up-to-date motion picture regulations.

As a part of the program outlined by Secretary Frederick H. Elliott of the Association it was planned to show a review of the most successful and appealing liberty loan subjects employed during the past several loan drives, this to illustrate the power of the motion picture in the proposed program of Secretary Lane for the fighting of Bolshevism through the American theatre screens.

The showing of these pictures was scheduled to be held in the Astor galleries of the Hotel Waldorf and a regular Type "S" Simplex Motor Driven Projector was ordered through the Precision Machine Company.

Mr. Sam Kaplan, who for eight years has been Chief Inspector of machines at the Simplex plant, is also President of Local No. 306 I. A. T. S. E., representing the projectionists of New York City. Mr. Kaplan at once got in touch with Mr. Elliott regarding the showing of the pictures referred to at the Waldorf, but much to his dismay found that the time for the granting of special permits covering the Secretary Lane dinner had expired. With this information before them some members connected with the arranging of affairs were for the abandoning the picture part of the program, but Mr. Kaplan realizing the necessity for showing these pictures at once put his general knowledge of motion picture regulations into action.

Despite the fact that the time for granting permits had expired, Mr. Kaplan followed along numerous channels that finally led him into the office of the Commissioner of Licenses at 12:30 Saturday noon, this after all departments had closed; but upon explaining the situation to Mr. Caldwell, Secretary to Commissioner Gilcrest, a license was soon granted.

It was not until late Saturday night that a Simplex Projector with a temporary booth was shipped to the Waldorf, but before breakfast on Sunday a motion picture performance was given.

Sam Kaplan

During the course of the Lane dinner, which is now a matter of history, after all those representing the various groups of the industry had pledged their support to the Lane program, it was announced that Sam Kaplan who was at the time supervising the projection, was also President of the New York Projectionists, with the result that Kaplan, from the balcony, pledged the operators of New York to the program of the Government thereby forging the last remaining link of pledges which the industry has made to the Administration at Washington.

Has Trouble With First Run Film

D. L. Harper, Strand Theatre, Charleston, W Va., says:

I am running first run films, and occasionally I find punch holes within two or three feet of th end, part one and etc., which looks very bad or the screen, unless you cut this two or three fee off.

Now I would suggest instead of punching them that you cut one sprocket hole out where you splic them together. Cut the hole in a V shape. S when taking them apart you can feel it with you fingers, or paste a small piece of paper on the end Enclosed find some illustrations.

I hope this will be a help towards putting a end to punch holes, as they are very ugly on th screen.

Westinghouse Electric & Mfg Co.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen:
We wish to advise that the Type CS, three phase Westinghouse motor generator set purchased from you in May 1917, has been in daily use.

Since its installation it has not cost us one cent for repairs, and is in as good condition as the day we put it in.

We have been told that our projection compares favorably with that of any house in the Southwest, and we do know that we have been free from the light troubles of the average small town showman.

We expect to open a house in new territory within the next year, and will be very glad to install one of your generators when the time comes.

Very truly,

His Transverter Hums

A READER asks for help:

I have a Transverter which gives good satisfaction except that it makes a loud humming noise which I have been unable to locate. Can you suggest a possible cause and remedy.

Reply:

The writer of the above letter gave so few details that we did not attempt to answer it. Instead we submitted his case to the makers of the machine in the hope that a similar trouble might have been called to their attention. In a reply, the Hertner Electric Company says:

"It is rather a difficult proposition to tell just what would cause the humming noise which your reader in the middle west complains of. The AC voltage may be low thus causing a decided drag on the motor when the two arcs are used. This is the most common cause of any noise such as is described.

In all cases of this sort we ask the projectionist who is making the complaint to have a voltage test made of his lines when the Transverter is operating both on single and double arcs and from this data we can oftentimes tell him how to remedy the trouble."

This trouble and the letter from the machine makers emphasize once more the need for instruments in the projection room. If this man with his humming Transverter could have told us in his query the conditions of line voltage under the usual operating conditions an answer could have been given him which would have been of immediate assistance. If you haven't got after your manager yet for those two instruments go now. It will probably take some time to educate him to the value of the meters so begin now.

A Story Called "Help Wanted" by Wm. C. Hoover

MR. HOOVER who comes from Eldorado, Kansas, sent in the following story with the statement that we could publish it if we saw fit, which we are glad to do, it being of real interest.

The other day I had just finished cleaning lenses and condensers and was running a reel through to get my lenses set before starting my show when a boy came in the booth and said, Bill, how can you get such a steady picture with your machines running so free and quiet, I answered, well, Pal, I cannot tell you because I do not have the education but I can show you. He said that is what I want and will thank you very much if you will. I asked him how long he was operating, he answered about fourteen months. I said, do you intend to stick to the trade or only working till you find something better, he replied "No." A man must have a trade these days and I picked this one, and I think that with a little help I can make good. But who is going to help me? No doubt, I can get by now in some houses but I am not satisfied, "If a man should ask me if I was an Operator" I could only reply "No" if I wanted to tell the truth.

I went along over to the Theatre where he is working and when I stepped in his booth I really was surprised as everything was nice and clean, machines were clean, floor, and not a piece of film exposed, in fact it looked like a projection room.

I set his intermittents and explained the setting to the best of my knowledge. I then left, not telling him what I thought of his booth, due to the fact that I do not think it right to praise a man up too much, for if you do, you will find that seven out of every ten get more or less careless. I am a member of I. A. Local No. 318 and member of N. A. M. L. No. 116 and have been operating for almost fourteen years and I do not care to have a man praise me up for anything. But I will say if a man tries to tell or show me something about projection I will listen to him and always give it a trial.

This chap is only 18 years of age, very bright and willing. If I am not mistaken, in a year or two he will be able to handle any equipment. Now there are hundreds of others like this chap that needs help but who is going to help them.

Now I think that if we all get together and help the man that is trying to get up in Projection, we will find that we will be learning ourselves at the same time besides the other man. There is no man that far that he cannot learn. So brothers, I ask you one and all, including myself, lets get together and help the man that wants to learn, perhaps unknown to us. We will be rewarded some day.

Originator of Unique Devices

TO any person interested in cleverly conceived and executed mechanisms a visit to the offices of the Bettini Syndicate on West 44th Street is well worth while. There Lieut. G. Bettini has gathered together the various pigmy cameras, ultraportable projectors, stereopticons, etc., which he has invented and brought to a state of perfection.

Several of his devices have been reported on and described at length in other technical publications but he is constantly at work on new ideas which equal in interest his older inventions.

His process of taking motion pictures on a glass plate and then showing them later in a special projector has received much favorable commendation especially from still photographers who see in the idea a method by which life-like, unposed photographs may be made.

In addition to this there is the automatic stereopticon for showing lantern slides in store windows, at lectures and at private permanent expositions. It is possible with this machine to throw the image of the slide in any direction or to throw more than one image of the same slide.

Lieut. Bettini has also worked out a special vest pocket camera which can be used for either snapshot work or as a motion picture camera. Its size compares favorably with the smallest of the kodaks on the market today.

He has a toy projector which uses a glass plate on which the successive images have been placed in the form of a spiral. The projector is turned by a crank and a suitable mechanism rotates the positive from the outside row of pictures to the center. When this little toy is ready for the public it should have a wide sale.

Camera! An Article on the "How" and "Why" of Practical Cinematography

Explaining Many of the Technical Problems of the Assistant Cameraman

By William Barbarin Laub

The rule is to underexpose and back-light for moonlight effects of any kind taken in the day time for underexposure produces pronounced shadows.

It is possible to create a moon in the clouds of a moonlight scene by first photographing a white paper moon on a piece of black velvet and then exposing your scene on the same film. It has also been done by photographing the full moon at night, using the stop-motion crank, but as a rule these effects are difficult to make perfect.

Splendid night photography has been done in the late evening when there is just enough light to give you dark full effects and lighted windows, etc., help to create the illusion. Many kinds of pyrotechnic or magnesium flares may be had from small matches to large torches for lighting up big spaces. The greatest difficulty in their use is to avoid the smoke they give off and care should be taken to work to windward of them whenever possible.

But whenever electric current is available and there is sufficient voltage the cameraman's problems are not difficult. It is possible to play a scene very slowly in the light of a powerful acetylene headlight, turning slower than normal. It is very necessary, however, to avoid having any action visible in the background when it is necessary to turn slowly for underlighted scenes of any kind for otherwise abnormal action will be noticed and a comedy effect will result. Daylight scenes, tinted for night effects more often have to be resorted to and in the past have been almost exclusively used but more and more, producers are demanding reality and as a result, cameraman are learning to work out of doors after sundown.

Sky or ray filters should be in every cameraman's equipment and a No. 2 or No. 3 "K" filter is the best for all around use. The gelatine filter has been found to be more often superior to glass filters unless the latter are expensive optically perfect attachments. The word "filter," hardly describes the real function of the attachment for it really reduces the highly actinic rays from the sky or in the glare from water and also more truly renders color values in skyscapes or distant landscapes, where the light is intense. They permit longer exposure, in fact the use of a No. 2 or "two times" filter calls for the next larger stop than you would ordinarily use under the same conditions.

A more expensive but very valuable attachment is the graduated ray filter which is just what the name implies and can be set before the lens to cut down any amount of sky exposure and give full exposure through the clearer portion of the gelatine to the darker portions of your picture.

Another item generally overlooked by most cameramen and an accessory of great value is a small and accurate level to place on the top of the camera or on top of the tripod under certain conditions until the machine is perfectly leveled. If you doubt the value of it and the frequent need of it, note carefully the horizon in the next water picture you see. It is very difficult to "level" your horizon on your focusing screen when shooting out across a large body of water and when there is any panaraming to do a horizon too often makes a slant. An accurately leveled tripod will overcome this trouble. Again, when called upon to photograph a scene dissolving into a title, there is seldom an opportunity of "doing" the title on a regular title machine which your camera will fit. You have only to level the base of the letters of the title and then level your camera and the result will be perfect. In interior work, the level is not often practical for doorways and windows are not always perfectly vertically erected by stage hands and it is safest to "make them straight" on your focusing screen even if your camera seems a little unlevel.

Nothing is more inartistic than leaning walls, doorways and window frames.

When going off to far distant locations for a week or more every kind of extra parts should be taken along and means provided for the elimination of scratches. Negative scratches are the bane of a cameraman's existence and many a position has been lost because a camera has developed this talent and apparently won't respond to treatment. On some cameras, it is unwise to allow the end of the film to be pulled through the "gate" unless the inside end has been carefully trimmed off evenly when loading the magazine. You should take the time and trouble to make your film fit your magazine spool without the necessity of tearing off and wasting two or three feet to make it go on, but not many assistants can be depended upon to do this.

A ragged end will sometimes fail to feed through the gate and claw fingers which pull the film across the aperture and small pieces will break off, lodging in the aperture and often remaining and showing in subsequent picturqes.

Scratches are caused by particles of emulsion adhering to the aperture plate across which the film travels. These particles of emulsion may be so small as to be invisible except under a microscope but they will gradually accumulate dirt and more emulsion until they are producing a continuous scratch on the soft surface of the film. A negative scratch will always be recognized on the screen by a black line on the positive and anything else (white scratches or tiny flares) is either a positive scratch or static electricity. The aperture plate should be kept brilliantly clean and polished and never rubbed with anything that will cut it, not even the finest emery paper.

Film in the camera should be occasionally examined on both sides for scratches at some point after it has passed the gate.

Looking at it nearly edgeways with a glare of light on it will unearth any trouble of this sort.

Static, electricity, usually produced in cold weather can fog film in the camera and careless handling of negative in a cold dark room will produce it. Simply avoid friction in handling film in cold weather and you will avoid static. Some cameras are almost static proof and others have been equipped with devices to keep them warm (entirely cameramens' experiments) but unless X-back film is used in cold weather, static is almost bound to occur. X-back negatives is provided with a transparent emulsion on the celluloid side to decrease friction.

On long trips, tests of scenes taken each day should be developed every night for not only are we then sure of our work but we have an "alibi" if a complaint is made back home over some negative we have shipped. We have our test of the same scene and we knew it was OK or it would have been retaken before being shipped to the laboratories.

A "changing" bag, in which you can load magazines on the field is a useful accessory and one man who travels all over the world making pictures uses an elaborate black cloth affair with a collapsible box attached in which he developes and "fixes" tests in milk bottles.

DEVELOPERS

A developer is any agent used to render visible the latent image, or in other words, to reduce to silver or other metal the latent image produced by the action of light on any sensitive salt. Developer is not the entire solution but only the base of it or the developer proper. Mixed developers as for example, hydroquinone and metol are generally used. Metol and like products, give detail quickly and density afterwards and hydroquinone and pyro give density first and detail gradually.

Thus, they are generally combined to obtain a combination of characteristics. In regard to other agents used in developing solutions, each one of course, has its own function.

Sodium sulphite is included to preserve the solution, sodium carbonate quickens the action and is called the accelerator.

Potassium bromide controls the action and keeps the negative clear—in extra quantities it "holds back" development.

One of the best substitutes for German metol which has of late been impossible for many people to obtain is a British product called Serchol, which can be used in any metol formula.

A quarter pound of hypo salts to 16 ounces of water will furnish a temporary fixing bath but a good formula for a bath that will keep a long time is as follows:

SOLUTION "A"

Water	96 oz.
Hypo salts	2 lbs.
E. K. Sulphite of Soda	2 oz.

SOLUTION "B"

Water	32 oz.
Chrome alum	2 oz.
Sulphuric acid C. P.	¼ oz.

Pour "B" into "A" slowly, while stirring rapidly.

Nothing is of greater value to a cameraman than a knowledge of laboratory work and a great many experts entered the field through the laboratory. Such men know the possibilities and limitations of the laboratory and work accordingly. With few exceptions, motion picture photographers are inclined to be very suspicious of the men in charge of developing and printing, and many are the unjust charges made against them. It is a deplorable fact that too many young and inexperienced men are intrusted with the developing of valuable film and photographers are absolutely right when they complain that a production costing thousands of dollars is often turned over to a laboratory boy being paid about fifteen dollars a week. But these condiitons are being improved all the time and as a general thing, complaining cameramen are right only about one third of the time. A stand-by of the studios is the joke about the man who declared that his stuff was being developed out of focus.

Given half a chance, the laboratory will do its work properly and many a camera man has been saved by expert treatment of his stuff. Don't send in about 600 feet of exposed negative taken under all sorts of light conditions and expect perfect results. The man who develops it has no way of knowing where every change in light occurs.

It is like trying to secure six perfect Kodak negatives when developing a roll of film on which two or three are snap shots and others, various time exposures. When you have finished several shots from one set-up, all with the same light conditions, shoot about two feet as a test and then tear a notch in the edge of your film. Tell the laboratory to look out for these tests and they will develop them first and time their development up to the most perfect results. All that proceeds the test piece will be given the same treatment and will be pretty nearly the best results they can obtain. Make a test of this sort once in a while and your photography will be intelligently handled in the laboratory.

Anything else you can tell them about your stuff or what to expect in a certain piece of film is a help to them and to you. Of course, it may reasonably be argued that unless a change is made in the developer formula to suit separate exposure on the film, such tests are not of great value. To really make a perfect development of every scene photographed, a developing agent should be specially prepared for the treatment of each separate exposure. But on the other hand, there is value in the test system for cameramen, to this extent; the laboratory worker will not undertime one scene while endeavoring to retard the development of something else on the same rack.

Whenever possible ,it is best to have a small supply of the developer on hand, that is used in the laboratory in which your negative is being handled, for then you will be able to develop tests under the exact conditions that will prevail when your negative is developed. These tests will enable you to accurately advise the laboratory what to expect from certain scenes.

Why Artificial Lighting is Generally Preferred In the Production of Motion Pictures

Some of the Reasons Behind the Gradual Transition to the Indoor Stage

By HOWARD M. EWING, Marshall Neilan Productions

THE question is often asked,—"Why do the motion picture companies use enclosed stages and artificial lights in the making of pictures instead of the natural sunlight which shines the year round in Southern California where most of the companies have their producing plants?"

To the average person,—that is, to anyone who has ever experimented with a still camera or kodak, a strong sun is indispensable to good results and pictures that are made indoors with the aid of the flashlight are never as satisfactory as those which are made with the sun beaming its strong rays on the object photographed.

But to the man who is intimate with the motion picture industry the answer is simple. In the first place picture making from the producer's standpoint is a commercialized business and requires practically the same number of hours per day as anything else. It must be remembered that the sun is continually changing its position and its light therefore is ever shining on a given object from different angles. If a studio set were built on an open stage, the acting upon which might take a whole day it can be easily understood that the lighting of the pictures taken in the morning would be entirely different from those taken in the late afternoon whereas with the use of arc and spotlights a company can start working in the early hours of the morning and continue through till late at night if necessary without any variation in the lighting effects.

Of course, when exterior scenes are filmed, outdoor locations are used because the natural change of light is then only as it should be, but when making interior scenes, uniform lighting is one of the most essential features of good photography.

With the advance of the motion picture as a commercialized industry, great progress has also been made in motion picture photography and new ideas and discoveries are constantly appearing which are of material aid to the producers in their quest for perfect productions.

The photography of today is a one hundred per cent improvement over that of five years ago but I believe that five years from now will see even a marked change from what it is today.

A theatre designed by Frank J. Forster, architect. The owner had many unique ideas which he wished incorporated in the exterior, and the view shows how the architect skillfully executed them

An Organist of Note

Mr. W. R. Burroughs is not only an organist capable of accompanying pictures, but also a man who is proving to be of great assistance to organists and theatre musicians throughout the country. He has mastered the organ for such houses as The Strand theatre, Detroit, Mich., Regent theatre, Rochester, N. Y., Grand theatre, Marion, Ohio, etc. For the past four years Mr. Burroughs has written a series of very interesting articles for "The Diapason," a monthly periodical, devoted to music and its affiliated branches. In paging through the January issue of "The Diapason" the editor found a very interesting article by Mr. Burroughs. This article reveals certain facts about music for the photoplay which in the estimation of the editor, are of such importance that he has decided to reproduce same for the benefit of the readers of these columns:

"We now come to a classification which the picture player uses more than any other kind, and to which publishers and composers are giving their attention more and more. Most of us can easily remember only a few years ago the exceeding difficulty of obtaining enough dramatic pieces to set up the films without constantly repeating the numbers in our repertory. For the theatre organist of today this cannot truthfully be said because he has at his disposal a large number of legitimate organ solos such as the Andante from Borowski's Sonata, Chauvet's Andantino, many movements from Guilmant's works, numerous transcriptions that actually sound better on the king of instruments than in the original form (Raff's Cavatina furnishes an instance), scores of piano and song transcriptions, piano solos which are easily adaptable, numerous dramatic songs like Del Riego's 'O Dry Those Tears,' and Mrs. Salter's 'Cry of Rachel,' and finally, thousands of piano parts of orchestrations. This last field has not yet been thoroughly explored; in fact every day research reveals new masterpieces originally written for orchestra, but many additional beautiful effects can be achieved by playing them on the organ. The organist has the advantage of having the color effects, 'cued in,' solos being indicated for strings, woodwind, reeds and flutes, all of which are included in the modern organ, and the added advantage of having such stops as the vox humania, vòx celeste and quintadena, which give a pathetic appeal entirely lacking in the orchestra.

"Our own experience has been that in the field of accompaniments there are more useful dramatic numbers than among organ compositions themselves. Merely to mention Leoni's 'L'Orocolo' (fourth movement, Strobl's 'Bride's Prayer,' Goiterman's 'Le Reve,' Tschaikowsky's 'Visions,' Ganne's 'Ecstasy,' and Favarger's 'L'Adieu' is to name a very few of the splendid numbers available for this kind of scenes.

"Two firms are giving their special attention to dramatic music for pictures. These are Schirmer and Belwin. Among the former's galaxy will be found many fine works, such as Friml's 'Melodie,' which is a type of composition most useful in playing dramatic scenes. Beginning with a quiet theme, the middle section works up to a dramatic climax and then gradually diminishes to the first theme again. As we have remarked in a previous article, this is the most useful style of dramatic composition. By starting a piece of this description at a point in the picture at which it will bring the climax in the music and picture together, and doing away with suddenly changing into an agitato, the effect is smoother than in many theatres we have attended where the music is literally chopped off short and another piece is begun. We believe agitatos should be used only where the action (struggles, chases, battles, etc.) continues for any length of time, but where the action suddenly works up to a tremendous climax, but continues for a short time only, it is much better to use a work heretofore described. An example of this occurs in the film 'Gambling in Souls' (Fox Film with Madelaine Traverse), in the fourth reel, where Charter's partner discovers Marcia has a signet ring of magnetic quality and is using it to manipulate the roulette wheel. As she is about to win he suddenly seizes her hand and there follow a few moments of dramatic action. We used Rachmaninoff's 'Prelude,' playing the middle section, and so timed it as to come to the fortissimo chords that precede the return of the first theme, and also stopping the music short for an instant as he seizes her hands.

"A collection of invaluable music for either organist or leader is issued by Belwin, who have among their composers Gaston Borch, a musician who has written many excellent dramatic numbers. 'The Crafty Spy,' from his pen, is a most valuable number. On the organ we use solo tuba in left hand and the accompanying chords in the right. He has also written 'The Slimy Viper,' a 'Dramatic Mysterioso,' 'Dramatic Tension,' etc. Two numbers which compel admiration are 'Tragic Theme,' and 'Sinister Theme,' both by Paul Vely. The 'Tragic Theme' has an original idea worthy of Beethoven and the 'Sinister Theme' is a mysterious minor melody depicting impending danger. Another fine piece is 'The Vampire,' by Levy, being a dramatic theme in A minor. As examples of piano solos the best are of the style of 'Erotik,' by Grieg, and Romance in D by Rubinstein."

To list all the dramatic numbers now available would take several pages, but upon request we will gladly send to readers of this column, a list of all dramatic pieces which appeared in the January issue of "The Diapason."—The Editor.

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

Advance Reviews and Short Length Features Covered on This Page

" His Temporary Wife "

Hodkinson—Produced and Directed by Joseph Levering—Length, 6 Reels)

OR the first reel this looked like something well out of the ordinary, quite an idea being hinted and receiving some development before it beme lost in a maze of scenes which had little to with the story.

Some very good people were gathered together support of Rubeye De Remer, among which are . T. Carleton, Edmund Breese, Armand Cortez d Mary Boland. It is in this department that e picture particularly recommends itself since e manner of developing the story impresses us as ing clumsy. It is quite possible however that aring errors in direction, the harsh lightings hich place the players under great handicaps, the ident intention of providing opportunities for the ar to pose will pass unnoticed when the producn reaches the theatre, owing to the fact that the cture gets a good start and develops quite an ement of suspense and an expectation of someing interesting happening from the mysterious tter which the aged millionaire writes and gives his nurse with instructions that it is not to be ad until sixty days after his death. You expect find that this letter outlines a clever scheme to wart the designs of Mary Boland as the "vamp" ho is planning to marry the hero for his money. hat nothing does come of this sequence worth uch, you do not learn until the picture is nearly er.

Acting honors go to Mr. Carleton who makes the ost of a small part. Mr. Breese is handicapped ith a role which permits no opportunities. Mary land is excellent as the "vamp". Armand Cortez es all any one could in a role which has limitans. Miss De Reymer is presented in some very ying scenes. In the first part of the feature, she "out of luck" and much footage is devoted to owing her mental and physical sufferings during is period. In the later sequences she appears in any scenes which contain no drama and are plainpadding.

With such a cast and a title which sounds inresting this ought to get business. How well it ill please depends on the individual. If your dience is critical they are apt to ask you quesns.—J. S. DICKERSON.

(Goldwyn)

INTO'S early life on an Arizona ranch under the guardianship of one of her father's friends whom she was bequeathed upon his death, is just e wild west stunt after another. She rides a rse like Buffalo Bill; throws a lasso like Will ogers; throws the bones in universal fashion, and a pest around the place generally. All of these complishments come in handy when she is sudenly transplanted into a millionaire New York mosphere, where she goes to spend a year under e tutelage of another guardian known as Pop udry. Her western education is made the mainstay of a lawn fete entertainment that she pulls off for an Orphan Benefit, on Audry's place, when his wife withdraws from the household as a sign of her disapproval of the appearance of Pinto. Pinto, however, learns inadvertently that this disapproval is only a cloak to hide an intrigue with a young society idler. And it is this society idler who puts a crimp in the lawn fete by feeding firewater to Looey, Pinto's faithful old Arizona attendant. The firewater, and a few words of gossip makes Looey flourish his gun and break up the entertainment. When the atmosphere clears, Looey tells who it was who fed him the 'pison' and Pinto reveals Mrs. Audry's faithlessness.

Robert De Witt, the boy who lives next door to Audry, has shown a lively interest in Pinto, to his father's intense disapproval, so he delivers to his son the ultimatum of leaving for the west within forty-eight hours, or be forever separated from the De Witt millions. At the Grand Central Station he meets Audry, Pinto and Looey who have determined to shed the dust of New York and take up their lives again on the Arizona ranch. Papa De Witt is foiled, for by obeying the parental instructions and going west, Bob's friendship with Pinto ripens in love as revealed in the tight embrace with which the picture ends.

"Pinto" is a great picture. It's a western and it's a society picture. It has the free atmosphere of the great out-doors, and it has the artificial atmosphere of a millionaire's hot house. It has the false friendship bred of idleness, and the staunch loyalty born of honesty. There's something to please everybody.

" Even as Eve "

(First National)

"EVEN AS EVE" is another illustration of the fact that a good story between the covers of a book does not readily lend itself to adaptation for the screen. Robert W. Chambers, who wrote it under the title of "The Shining Band" might not like it at all, but from the standpoint of the average audience the piece provides excellent entertainment and it has been photographed, acted and directed in splendid fashion.

It is not always possible to carry to the screen every scene and every long-winded belief of the author on certain phases of American social life. For that reason in "Even as Eve" the story has been cut in part, and augmented elsewhere, but it is easily recognizable and it will pass muster with those who have read the novel as well as countless others who seek merely to be amused.

The plot deals with an unusual theme and while in less careful hands the story might prove objectionable it has been so carefully directed and acted as to preclude a hint of vulgarity. Eileen O'Hara (Grace Darling) whose parents are members of a religious cult that objects to marriage and regards it as a sin, breaks the law of the community sufficiently to make the acquaintance of outsiders. She is immediately persecuted by the leader of the sect who tries to bring about her downfall but after a series of sensational episodes she wins happiness. Grace Darling, Ramsaye Wallace, E. J. Ratcliffe, Sally Crute, Marc MacDermott are the principal players.—FRED T. GRENELL.

" Ruined by Love "

(Gaiety Comedy Starring George Ovey—Directed by James Clemens from a Story by Frank R. Conklin)

THE plot of Georve Ovey's latest comedy "Ruined by Love" is contained in mistaking the meaning of the word "Chlorine," same referring to the maiden name of a beach vampire. Lillian thought that it meant the deadly drug instead of a deadly female.

The picture opens with the eccentric comedian seeking divers ways of committing suicide because his sweetheart has given him the mitten. While attempting to find a painless way of ending his life he encounters a bathing girl by the name of Chlorine who soon makes him change his mind about wishing to leave this wicked world. Just to relieve his former sweetheart's mind he sends her a wire which reads that he is changing his mind and taking chlorine instead.

Then George walks home having in his despondency given away his money to a beggar. Too weary to disrobe he falls asleep on his bed. When Lillian receives the telegram mentioned she though chlorine meant poison, so with a bunch of her girl friends she goes to George's home, to inspect the remains. She finds him "dead to the world" but alive. She wants a doctor so she telephones to a "Dr. Hitchem." While waiting for the physician, Lillian regrets that she hadn't accepted the supposed suicide. Soon the doctor arrives with prayer book in hand, for it is a D.D. instead of an M.D. to which Lillian has telephoned. The wedding is held immediately.

The incidents which have been improvised to fill in about this typical slap-stick plot are well suited to Mr. Ovey's particular talents and with the aid of the girls, a very entertaining piece of nonsense has been produced.—J. S. DICKERSON.

" The Star Boarder "

(Mack Sennett—Famous Players-Lasky—Two Reels)

MACK SENNETT'S latest concoction in slapstick is when the laughs are all counted about on an average with the product from this studio. It starts off with promise of being a real hit but later degenerates into the usual stuff from the same old bag of tricks both as to plot and business.

In giving the comedy a good send off, Ben Turpin, a baby and the Mack Sennett dog are mainly responsible. Turpin plays a cigar salesman.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 4, 1919.

"THE CINEMA MURDER"

(COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT)

Conventional Story Lifted Through Sumptuous Production

NO traditions have been violated in this story by E. Phillips Oppenheim, which has reached the screen after a serial career in the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Not a great deal of nspiration has been utilized in conceiving or executing the idea behind it. The plot and characterization are identically like dozens of others which have found animation on the silversheet the last few weeks. You look upon a beautiful girl who is educated for a stage areer by a moral leper, and when he would ask her to pay and pay and pay, she promptly flaunts an expression of innocence in his face and tells him that she loves a poor and honest playwright.

In cataloguing the characters you may well imagine just how conveniently everything is arranged. The author finds himself in a "pocket" when he has the hero charged with murder, but he gets out of his dilemma by exploiting the long arm of coincidence and uncovering the supposed dead man as very much alive. Indeed concidence is quite a healthy factor in the development of this story. The merest tyro in attending photoplays can guess the outcome rom the moment that the playwright is introduced. He will be hankful that the director showed such discrimination as to spare he usual courtroom scene of colorless dimensions.

The picture takes issue with realities in its characterization, principally because too much is taken for granted. But story aside, the feature overcomes its shortcomings in a measure since it has been given a fine production. Miss Davies is permitted a chance to look attractive and her costumes will surely appeal to feminine eyes. The title is misleading since there is nothing harrowing or grewsome n the contents.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Marion Davies, the beautiful young Paramount-Artcraft star, will be seen at the ——— theatre beginning ——— in her latest Cosmopolitan production, "The Cinema Murder." This is a screen adaptation of a story by E. Phillips Oppenheim which first appeared as a serial in the Cosmopolitan Magazine and which later entered the ranks of the best selling novels. The author has made himself famous through his ability to write mystery and romantic stories and "The Cinema Murder" carries enough ingredients o earn him further encomiums. Mr. Oppenheim has prepared a vehicle of the utmost dramatic suspense, dealing as it does with a supposed murder and a girl's fight to maintain her honor.

The heroine, Elizabeth Dalston, is a promsing young actress, who has been educated abroad by a financier named Power. She is returning through rural England to her steamer when she happens to witness a fight between Douglas and Philip Romilly, cousins. Philip is seeking to force Douglas to acknowledge a certain crime and the latter s apparently killed during the scuffle. The young man then utilizes his cousin's passports and is on the same steamer which Elizabeth takes to America. A warm friendship springs up between the two. Elizabeth induces Power to produce Philip's play and the girl makes a great success in the leading role. On the night that Romilly declares his love for her, Power also comes and makes a disreputable proposal. In the meantime Scotland Yard is on the trail of Philip, and at the moment he is about to be arrested on a charge of murder, his supposed victim, Douglas, who had been hiding in England, appears and clears him. Thus Power is foiled and Elizabeth and Philip are made happy. Miss Davies appears to good advantage in all her emotional scenes and is surrounded by a cast of exceptional merit.

A Well Constructed Drama

THIS feature will score on its merits, for it contains all the ingredients from which pleasing screen drama is constructed, heart interest, romance suspense and a well constructed story. Photography and direction are to the standard and the titles are well written and to the point.

Lucy Cotton is adequate in the leading role and the supporting cast contains such well known players as George Le Guere, Thurlow Bergen and Frank O'Connor.

A young heiress and her guardian have taken a trip to one of our well known summer resorts. While there she visits its gambling rooms, becomes fascinated with the game and with a young man of good family who has become desperate in the game of chance. A crafty broker who is in financial difficulties appears upon the scene and observing her interest in the young man induces him to sign a note agreeing to pay a certain sum of money provided a marriage takes place through his introduction.

Although the broker succeeds in his schemes he does not obtain the money, for the young man on learning that he has been duped, refuses to pay, the result of which leads the story up to many exciting and dramatic situations and causes the death of the girl's guardian, who is shot in a scuffle while trying to obtain possession of a revolver, a scene in which all three men participate.

Our heroine, who has become highly incensed because circumstances lead her to believe that she has been "tricked" into marriage for her money, begins to despise her husband.

This tragedy, however, leads to the "villain's" confession of his scheme and reinstates the hero in his wife's affections.—Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Blind Love," the Gerald F. Bacon production, starring Lucy Cotton, will be presented at the ——— theatre for a ——— beginning ———.

It is a story of the present moment, containing love interest, intrigue and many highly dramatic situations.

It shows the love of a young girl for the young man of her choice, who, although coming from a good family, is a desperate gambler. When in a state of drunkenness he is "tricked" by the older man, who is a broker by trade, into signing a check which promises to pay to the older and wiser one $50,000 in case an introduction and marriage is brought about by him.

Although he succeeds in his schemes, he does not obtain the money for the young man, on being confronted with the note, declares it a forgery, the following scenes leading up to many highly dramatic situations which are bound to keep an audience at tension point, the climax of which sees three men struggling for the possession of a revolver which explodes, killing one of them, who is the girl's guardian.

Interwoven between these scenes is another story which shows the love of a strong man for the woman he has been deprived of. Years before the heroine's guardian had loved and lost. His sweetheart had married another man, who is none other than the crafty broker. But he had never forgotten her and many touching moments occur when he is seen in her presence again.

And it is in her home that the struggle takes place between the three men for possession of the pistol, a shot from which fatally wounds him. He is carried home and dies declaring that he had shot himself, because of an incurable disease.

This tragedy leads to the "villain's" confession of his scheme and reinstates the hero in his wife's favor.

CATCH LINES

She loved a desperate gambler and married him. How did it turn out. See "Blind Love."

Three men struggle for possession of a revolver. Which one is killed. "Blind Love" will tell you.

He was a crafty schemer and succeeded in getting the young man to sign a check promising to pay a large sum of money to him provided he was successful in bringing about the marriage of the young man and an heiress. How did his schemes turn out? See "Blind Love."

He loved a woman all his life, but lost her to another man. And it was in her home that he was killed. Was he right in going there. See "Blind Love."

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— announces that "Blind Love," Gerald F. Bacon's wonderful story of American life, will play this theatre on ——— of ——— week.

The production has as its star Lucy Cotton, who is known to the screen as one of its prettiest women, and also one of its most capable actresses. In this picture, according to the reviewers, Miss Cotton is superb, the story requiring as its feature player one who is skilled in the handling of light and shade.

But Miss Cotton has taken the painter's brush in her hand and has drawn a picture which will give pleasant entertainment to those who see it.

Many well known screen favorites are in the cast, among whom are George Le Guere, Frank O'Connor, Thurlow Bergen, Morgan Coman, Charles Butler and Edouards Durand.

Josephine Burden, an heiress, has become interested in a young man of good family who is known to be a desperate gambler. While in a drunken condition he signs a check agreeing to pay a large sum of money to a crafty scheme, provided the latter can bring about a marriage between the two.

The marriage takes place, but the young man refuses to pay, realizing that he has been duped, the result of which leads the story up to many exciting and dramatic situations and causes the death of the girl's guardian.

This tragedy leads to the schemer's confession of his guilt and reinstates the hero in his wife's affections, which were somewhat strained.

SUGGESTIONS

..When you book this feature mention that it has a wonderful story, one that is bound to grip any audience and hold their attention throughout. But above all do not fail to play up the star, who, although she has a very difficult role to portray, plays it to perfection, handling the lighter and heavier parts with the skill of a true artiste and never once letting up in any scene throughout the picture.

Also mention that Miss Cotton is coming to the fore very rapidly and is beginning to be known as one of the screen's most popular actresses through her wonderful work as an artist and for the beauty which she possesses.

Do not fail to mention that Miss Cotton is supported by a cast of prominent players who are also perfect types in the parts they are cast for.

"THE CYCLONE"

(FOX

Familiar Formula Makes Fair Picture for Mix

THE subject matter of Tom Mix's newest picture, "The Cyclone," doesn't present him at his best if one accepts the name of the Fox star as synonymous with the element known as punch. While his products are generally alike insofar as they permit him to exploit his horsemanship, this talent is wasted unless it is presented in an original manner. And it cannot be said that Mr. Mix offers anything new in the present material.

The theme belongs to formula (Number Six) since it gives us one of the oldest characters in screen stories, namely, the Northwest Mounted Policeman. And to qualify as one of those riding minions of the law, you must be sure of getting your man. There is the plot in a nutshell. No variation on a familiar pattern is revealed which might lift it out of an obvious rut. It travels its orb with all the customary trimmings and trappings. You know for a certainty that the dangers attached to the job of getting his man will accumulate for the customary climax. Such a formula scenarists invariably follow when bereft, temporarily, of their imaginations.

Either the star or his director has taken liberties with truth in several instances. The former would have us believe that he can recover from a brutal assault in a few seconds as if he had received no greater injury than to be kissed by a butterfly. And again he plunges his horse through three stories without incapacitating the animal. It is the climax which presents the customary Mix—the Mix of supreme horsemanship. It contains a number of mild thrills. The Northwest Mounted formula is becoming a little too old-fashioned.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Scenario by J. Anthony Roach.
Directed by Cliff Smith.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Tom Mix, interpreter of Western characters, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. His latest picture is "The Cyclone," and it presents him in the role of a Northwest mounted policeman. From the very opening scene until the final close-up the action mingles thrills and romantic incidents in such alluring proportions that the interest is never once allowed to drop. The story for "The Cyclone" was written by Col. Todhunter Marigold and produced under the direction of Cliff Smith, one of the leading directors of this type of motion picture. He has kept the action always spontaneous and the original way he has of doing things makes the story appear in a refreshing light.

Mr. Mix assumes the character of Sergeant Tim Ryerson, who is commissioned to get his man (the Northwest mounted police always get their men). It doesn't take him long to get on the trail of the criminal, who is not only guilty of murdering one of the Mounted, but is the ringleader in smuggling Chinese across the boundary into the United States. Sergeant Tim meets with an accident which permits his enemy to overpower him. Undaunted, he follows his trail to the Chinese district of Vancouver, and he captures him after a series of exciting events. Sergeant Tim rides his horse right into a notorious den, and taking him to the roof, plunges to the cellar, and when the action is cleared away there he stands smiling and the bandit is in the hands of the police. Be it said that Tim finds the girl there—she having been kidnapped by the criminal. It is a familiar story, but so plentiful are the actionful scenes, and so well does Mr. Mix acquit himself that it never appears obvious. The star is supported by a competent cast.

CATCH LINES

They called him the "Cyclone" because his trigger finger was steady and his bullets were true. And how he could ride that horse! See "The Cyclone" with Tom Mix.

Tom Mix always does the unusual in his Western pictures. Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and see him execute some new feats. His new picture is endowed with plentiful action and thrills. Don't fail to see it.

He belonged to the Northwest Mounted Police, that picturesque body of men who never fail in the execution of their duty. See Tom Mix get his man in a picture of action and thrills.

Was he a Cyclone? You bet he was. He tore along the road like a demon. He could ride and shoot. And when he started a fight his opponents realized that they were in a cyclone sure enough.

PROGRAM READER

A member of the Northwest Mounted Police was killed in the execution of his duty. Sergeant Tim Ryerson was commissioned to get the criminal dead or alive. And you know that a man who belongs to this body of policemen never fails. Well Sergeant Tim came across a clue which led to the very home of his sweetheart, and there he found that the foreman of the ranch was the very man he wanted. In following him he came upon a plot to smuggle Chinese across the boundary into the United States. So the criminal had two scores to settle for himself. How Tim was frustrated at first, how he got his man after a troublesome search, is told in a highly exciting manner in "The Cyclone," the latest picture to present Tom Mix, the star of Western stories. Sounds pretty interesting, doesn't it? It is one of the most exciting pictures in this actor's series. You will see Mr. Mix execute some new and daring stunts.

SUGGESTIONS

You should have no trouble in bringing the crowds in for this picture, provided you played the other Mix features. He is his own best advertiser. When a patron sees him he immediately advertises him by word of mouth. Reports indicate that his pictures are the most popular Westerns shown. Why? Because the star is always in there trying. He never duplicates his stunts. One is always assured of something new, notwithstanding that the material is often familiar. You can bill him here as an exponent of the Northwest.

Rather a good looking "Canadian Mounted" Tom Mix makes in "The Cyclone," released by William Fox

"THE BEAUTY MARKET"

(FIRST NATIONAL

Plot Ancient, But Intelligently Treated

THOSE who direct their photoplay entertainment will recognize in this production the rather ancient and always somewhat sordid plot of the society butterfly who is willing to sell herself to the highest bidder, but who through the intervention of fate finally wins a husband she can love and at the same time does quite well financially too. They may also complain that the story advances only when titles are used and call some of these by their true names, platitudes.

On the other hand most people go to the theatre to be entertained and they seem to like the old standbys providing the director dresses them up in new clothes, which is what has been done in "The Beauty Market." Miss MacDonald is a somewhat unusual type of "beauty on the market," in that she is quite frank in admitting her ambition to marry well. Roy Stewart is also a bit out of the usual run of heroes in that he is not poor and has no illusions concerning Miss MacDonald's willingness to be purchased. Winter Hall is not a rogue who selects a wife as a last resort in the hope of having a home for his senility. He is a very dignified and acceptable would-be purchaser. All in all this is the sort of a society picture which most people approve. It gives them a chance to sit back in their seats with a "holier than thou" attitude, shows them a lot of nice clothes and handsome sets and comes out just the way they knew it would. Even the villainess repents when she gets found out and decides to marry for love, having nothing better in prospect anyway. A very orthodox play is this, given a very good production with correct types in all the roles.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Amelie Thorndike	Katherine McDonald
Captain Kenneth Laird	Roy Stewart
Christine Appleby	Kathleen Kirkham
Hobie Flagg	Wedgewood Noel
Amelia's Uncle Isaacs	Robert Brower

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The American Beauty," as Katherine MacDonald, newest of leading film stars has been called will be seen in her latest photoplay, "The Beauty Market," beginning ——— at the ——— theatre.

Coming close on the heels of "The Thunderbolt," a First National picture which established Miss MacDonald firmly in the minds of the public as a talented actress as well as a real beauty, "The Beauty Market," can not fail to please. It is a typical vehicle for this star since the theme is one which particularly fits her. She is shown as a society butterfly who is deliberately placing herself on the matrimonial market in the hope of selling her beauty to a rich man who can and will give her the luxuries she thinks essential to her happiness. However unlike the usual story of this sort she does so without compunction and with no misgivings. The plot is unusual in this respect. In support of Miss MacDonald is Roy Stewart a star in his own right and other well known players including Robert Brower and Kathleen Kirkham. The production is one of the most notable of the season.

PROGRAM READER

Almost overnight Katherine MacDonald "The American Beauty" has established herself as a film star of first magnitude. The picture in which she accomplished the seemingly impossible was "The Thunderbolt," in which she dividing acting honors with Thomas Meighan. In "The Beauty Market," which is the title of her latest production the beautiful First National star has a role which gives her full opportunity and which fits extremely well her personality. "The Beauty Market" is a story of a beautiful young society girl who has placed herself on the matrimonial market hoping to marry a man who could provide the luxuries she craved. How after bargaining with an old man whom she did not love, fate intervenes and brings her the man of her choice makes an interesting photoplay. The picture has been wonderfully produced, and shows society with all its shams, and intrigues.

SUGGESTIONS

Besides the usual methods of advertising this picture and which will be apparent when you see it, there is presented an opportunity of staging a style show in connection with your engagement. Pretty gowns and evening clothes are the background of this picture. Make arrangements for displaying the latest spring fashions in women's lingerie as a prologue number. Play up the "clothes" angle of the picture and Miss MacDonald's beauty. Offer a prize to be awarded by vote of your audiences for the prettiest and tastiest dressed girl who will act as one of the mannequins at your fashion show. Describe the gowns they will year. Work in conjunction with the women's apparel stores of your city. They will be anxious to have a pre-season showing for their Spring fashions. Get competition into the style show if you can.

The problem of "The Beauty Market" is age old. How far is a woman justified in looking out for a material welfare? Suppose she has been brought up in luxury. Is she justified in marrying for money providing the man is a "good catch" otherwise? Asking questions along this line in your exploitation will excite the interest of women.

Another line of query is: Is all fair in love and war? Is a woman justified in exposing her rival when both want to marry a man for his money? Can she use methods which would be wrong in a business deal? The "beauty market" idea presents unlimited angles of exploitation.

CATCH LINES

"The American Beauty" in "The Beauty Market."

"Her body for sale to the highest bidder without scruple: That was the bargain which society's most beautiful girl was willing to conclude."

The love of luxury, the instinctive desire for the good things of life, the training of the society of which she was a part, all told her to marry a man who could and would give her the good things of life. She married such a man—but not the one for whom she had "set her cap," fate intervened—how is told in the story.

From time immemorial men have bought their women—in one way or another. They are still doing it and that is the plot of this wonderful picture in which "The American Beauty," Katherine MacDonald, placed herself on the auction block of the matrimonial market.

woman's heart? Does it overwhelm gratitude for the past and ambition for the future? These questions are answered in a dramatic manner in "The Cinema Murder," a picture tense with conflict and mystery and filled with absorbing episodes. Miss Davies receives splendid support.

SUGGESTIONS

In presenting Marion Davies pictures you cannot dwell with two great stress on the beauty of the star. Superlatives may be used in emphasizing her charm and attractiveness. For the benefit of your feminine patrons you should mention the wonderful array of gowns worn by the star. This picture is being advertised on an extensive scale. Prizes are being offered to the extent of $1,000.00 for the best answer to the problem presented in the story. You might [illegible] that the picture is arousing considerable curiosity throughout the country.

"THE PHANTOM MELODY"

(UNIVERSAL)

Fantastic Story of Love and Vengeance

AN unusual story as far as the screen is concerned has been revealed in "The Phantom Melody," which serves as Monroe Salisbury's latest expression. The author of it has failed to give credit to Marie Corelli since it is nothing more or less than a visualization of her fantastic tale "The Vendetta." However, it has been brought up to date by transplanting the action as centering around the lately deceased war. In developing the romance between a suitor of middle age and his sweetheart, more concentrated situations are unfolded than take place in a half-dozen ordinary features.

It is remarkable how the dead return to life here. You see a soldier come back from the grave, but the most uncanny revelation of "Life After Death" comes in the climax, when the villain buries the hero alive in order to capitalize on the "deceased's" fortune and romance. It will make a sensitive spectator's skin creep to see Salisbury fight for life, rise from his coffin, break the window of his vault and escape. That scene is the outstanding feature in this weird concoction. It is positively harrowing to watch.

The whole fabric of the story is not calculated to enlist one's sympathies since it is outrageously false and fantastic. The hero's hair turns completely white in suffering his horrible experience, and his beloved does not recognize him until he plays his famous composition. Eventually the romance is renewed, but the hero denies his Latin blood in showing such a spirit of forgiveness to his enemy. The picture is rich in suspensive value and the backgrounds are atmospheric and colorful.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Monroe Salisbury, the versatile Universal star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest feature entitled "The Phantom Melody." This is an original story by F. McGrew Willis and details a strange fate pursuing the members of a titled British and a wealthy Italian family during war times in Italy. It may be defined as a powerfully dramatic romance—one that carries the utmost in suspense. It concerns Count di Montrone, an Italian nobleman, who is in love with his ward, Mary Drake, the daughter of an English Baronet, who makes his home in Italy. Owing to the difference in their ages the Count does not declare his feelings, believing her to be in love with his cousin, Giorgetto Pisani, who is only wooing her for her vast estate.

The world war has broken out and the Count leaves for the front, but Giorgetto engages in riotous living at Monte Carlo, persuading Mary's brother Oliver, by trickery, to go to the front in his place. Giorgetto, finally, without funds and hounded by an avaricious money lender, returns to the Montrone estate and purloins the family jewels. The Count has returned on a furlough and is struck by lightning, apparently fatally, during a terrific storm. Although knowing him to be alive, Giorgetto buries him in the family vault. Through superhuman effort the Count makes his escape after reaching consciousness and learns that his cousin has succeeded to the title and woos the woman di Montrone loves. The dreadful experience turns the Count's hair completely white. He loses his identity and becomes a music master. He later returns and wins the girl he loves through the power of his phantom melody. This is an unusual story—one filled with startling situations and climaxes. It is capably interpreted.

CATCH LINES

How would you like to be buried alive and wake up to find yourself in a vault with no possible means of escape? Don't you think your hair would turn white? See Monroe Salisbury in "The Phantom Melody."

He came back from the grave and when he played the phantom melody his sweetheart recognized him even though his hair had turned white. See Monroe Salisbury in "The Phantom Melody," a picture of vengeance and love.

Monroe Salisbury in "The Phantom Melody," his latest Universal picture

Buried alive! Think of it! But he found a way out. He came back to find that his sweetheart mourned him. How to convince her that he really lived? See "The Phantom Melody."

PROGRAM READER

He was an Italian nobleman in love with his ward. When he came from the war on a leave of absence he found that his cousin was attempting to usurp his place in her affections. During a terrific storm he was struck by lightning, apparently fatally, and although knowing him to be alive the younger man permitted his burial in the family vault. Think of it, to be buried alive! Now the Count returned to life, escaped from the tomb, and though ignorant of his cousin's perfidy, eventually won the woman he loved by the power of his phantom melody, are events that give rise to a succession of strong scenes that lead to a tremendous climax. The locale of the story being in Italy, the producers have given the production an artistic and colorful background. Make no mistake about it—"The Phantom Melody" is one of the most unusual pictures ever revealed. You will agree with us when you see it with Monroe Salisbury as the star. Remember next ———.

SUGGESTIONS

Emphasize this picture as one of the most unusual that has ever reached the screen. Be sure to bring out that it unfolds a distinctly novel theme—a theme which sounds something new in plot and characterization. Be sure to mention that the versatile star, Monroe Salisbury, appears in the picture, surrounded by a competent cast. What of the title? Surely it suggests itself for exploitation along the catch line angle. Make out that the picture presents a tale founded upon adventure, revenge and romance and that it is dramatic to the core. Mention the star's other releases. Use stills plentifully.

"THE THIRD GENERATION"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Fairly Interesting Picture on a Domestic Theme

HENRY KOLKER, who wrote and directed this photoplay, has been fairly truthful in his composition, although in emphasizing its moral he has allowed his action to become a trifle draggy. It carries a theme that does not get out of its groove, consequently there are no balancing highlights of conflict and suspense. He presents us with the theory that the first generation can establish a successful business and that the third generation can bring it to ruin through taking too much for granted and allowing pleasure to take too firm a hold.

The hero realizing that he must maintain the family honor decides to commit suicide rather than face bankruptcy. Though he is prevented from taking his life his wife and friends mourn him as dead. He goes to the boundless West to work out his own salvation and in due time he is back with his self-respect and fortune fully restored. The subject doesn't unfold any sympathetic touch in its characterization since not only the hero but his wife is inclined to trespass. The little dramatic appeal that it contains involves the figures in a mild domestic triangle and certain crooked business arrangements.

Still the picture offers a vein of truth. You follow a theme that COULD HAPPEN in real life, although there is nothing absorbing about its development. It is a colorless picture if you analyze it from the standpoint of dramatic ingredients. Mr. Kolker has concentrated too much effort in his attention to details. The action falters as a result. Mahlon Hamilton and Betty Blythe enact the leading roles and acquit themselves in a capable manner.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Alden Van Deusen	Mahlon Hamilton
Helen Van Deusen, his wife	Betty Blythe
Nancy Jane	Peggy Cartwright
John Barker	Herbert Jones
Col. Butterworth	Joseph Swickard
Bert Caldwell	Edward Cecil
Cuthbert Steele	Jack Pratt

By Henry Kolker.

Directed by Henry Kolker.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Third Generation" is the title of the feature which will appear as the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is an original story written by Henry Kolker, who also directed the picture, and it tells of a young business man whose firm is compelled to go into bankruptcy because he is more concerned in becoming a social lion than in following the sound business methods of his grandfather, the founder of the firm. Alden Van Deusen, however, has inherited the honesty of purpose of the first generation, and his partners present a scheme which will ultimately allow the firm to recuperate. But when he looks at the painting of his grandfather, he is firmly resolved that death would be more acceptable than bringing any dishonor on the family name.

Steele, a member of the firm, broaches the argument that Mrs. Van Deusen could come to the rescue by enlisting the services of Bert Caldwell, an intimate friend. Which naturally makes Van Deusen suspicious of his wife's conduct. Since he is so deeply involved in financial matters, and believing that Helen doesn't love him any more, Alden resolves to commit suicide. He is prevented and makes his way to the West, though his wife and intimate friends believe him to be dead. After many vicissitudes he finally gains enough courage to face the world. He has worked hard, has Alden, and he eventually brings his business back to a solid basis, and a reconciliation follows with Helen. "The Third Generation" is a picture which presents an interesting line of action. It embodies a wealth of human interest and a plethora of dramatic scenes. A competent cast, headed by Mahlon Hamilton and Betty Blythe, gives the picture a capable interpretation.

CATCH LINES

He belonged to the third generation and the successful business founded by his grandfather was in danger of being destroyed because he merely reflected the old man's views instead of practicing them.

He sought the easiest way out of his dilemma—suicide. Rather than disgrace the family name he would take his life than practice deceitfulness. What happened? See "The Third Generation."

It is an acknowledged truth that the third generation becomes weaker than the first generation unless the same beliefs are practiced. A man cannot live upon the achievements of his grandfather. See "The Third Generation" and discover this truth. A great picture.

A picture of rich dramatic action—a picture of finance and society. His wife cared more for social recognition than that her husband should succeed in business. See "The Third Generation."

PROGRAM READER

Alden Van Deusen belonged to the third generation. He reflected his grandfather's business acumen—a business which had been founded through hard work and sincerity of purpose. He didn't think that the business could possibly go to crash. That is a weakness of the third generation. Those who belong to it believe that it is unnecessary to keep striving for success, since they have a share of it in their possession. But success sometimes falters into failure because the third generation is brought up in the lap of luxury. Take Alden Van Deusen, for instance. While he inherited his grandfather's integrity, he thought more of society and pleasure than he did of his business. How he failed, how he found himself after months of vicissitudes, how he realized that only by keeping his shoulder to the wheel could he possibly succeed is dramatically told in a series of absorbing and suspensive situations. "The Third Generation" is the picture and it will be presented here next ——— with a cast headed by Mahlon Hamilton and Betty Blythe.

SUGGESTIONS

After this picture is booked the fact that two well known screen players of the calibre of Mahlon Hamilton and Betty Blythe should be emphasized. It is a picture which does not lend itself well to lobby display advertising. You might feature the players and scenes in the stills. Bring out that it is a picture showing the weakness of the third generation. The law of averages tells us that the members of the third generation are quite content to bask in the glory of their ancestors—providing these ancestors were great. Bring out that the picture reveals how a rich young man of the third generation allowed his business to go to ruin because he thought more of social pleasures. You might feature it in teasers—such as "Even Unto the Third Generation." No more than that expression is necessary, and it will arouse curiosity. Keep before the public that the picture unfolds a dramatic story that holds the interest to the end.

"Blind Love"

Among these players are George Le Guere, Frank O'Connor, Thurlow Bergen, Morgan Coman, Charles Butler and Edouards Durand.

And again do not be afraid to play up the story for all it is worth, for it is one that can play any house and get by on its merits. It has the necessary ingredients, love interest, suspense, dramatic moments and a tragedy.

"A MODERN SALOME"

(HOPE HAMPTON—METRO)

Satisfies from All Angles

HERE'S a picture which should satisfy any audience.

First, it has the story which is strong, full of suspense and enough action to keep patrons at attention throughout; second, it was directed by Leonce Perret, who gave it the attention a master artist would to a great painting, paying special attention to the little things which, when taken as at whole, are fifty per cent of any feature. Third, it has the star, Hope Hampton, who is as well known for her acting ability in handling the light and shade of difficult situations, as she is for her appearance, and she certainly will attract the eyes of the feminine folks in this production with the beautiful gowns she wears, and the way she sets them off. And last, the cast which, although small is composed of some of our best screen artists. They are Sidney L. Mason, Percy Standing, Arthur Donaldson, Wyndham Standing and Agnes Ayers.

The photography is to standard, and the sets, amongst which were many sumptuous and expensive ones, could not have been arranged better.

A young girl struggling for an existence as an illustrator marries a millionaire after a disagreement with her fiance. After her marriage she discovers that her former fiance is a cad. Using love letters she has written during their engagement he obtains large loans from her. When she refuses to lend him more he threatens to show these letters to her husband. She resents this and a struggle takes place in which she is slowly being overcome, when her husband's secretary appears on the scene, tears the frantic schemer away and is about to throw him out when the husband appears. He questions his wife and she, still fearing the imposter, accuses the unfortunate secretary who is ordered from the house, the result of which leads to his losing his wife, child and home. He now becomes a wanderer drifting hither and thither, until arriving at the lowest depths he is discovered by his accuser who confesses to his wife the true facts. Thus matters are arighted again and the "villain" duly punished. —Length, 6 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Hope Hampton in the charming modern production, "A Modern Salome," will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is a feature which contains all the necessary ingredients to make it one of the most popular pictures of the present time. It contains a wonderful story which is full of intrigue, dramatic situations and suspense. The production was written and produced by Leonce Perret, one of our best known directors who could not have done better work in telling the story and bringing out the important points in order that they might score. Mr. Perret has also given special attention to detail and must be given special credit for the way he has taken the artist's brush in his hand and drawn the colors so lifelike.

After the death of her father, a well-known but improvident artist, Virginia Hastings, known to friends as "Salome," attempts to make her own way as an illustrator. But the struggle is an unequal one and she revolts at the poverty she is forced to endure. She is engaged to Roberto Monti, a young broker, but is sought by James Vandan, a multi-millionaire whom she loves and can supply her with every comfort and luxury.

After she has married Vandan, she discovers that Monti, her former fiance, is a "cad." Using the love letters she has written during their engagement, he obtains large loans from her to gamble with in "the street." Salome plunges lavishly into the frivolities of society in New York and Newport. Her entertainments become famous for their reckless splendor.

She has many admriers and lives on adulation. Harry Torrence, her husband's secretary, alone is not moved to worship her and she is angered by his indifference when all the rest of the world is at her feet. A ball is to be given by her husband and she insists that the Torrences be invited. On the evening of the entertainment she meets the secretary and is much disappointed at his remarkable coolness, which arouses her hate.

The next evening Monte calls upon her and demands more money. She refuses and he threatens to expose her to her husband. This incites a struggle in which she is gradually being overcome when the secretary appears upon the scene, overcomes the impostor and is about to throw him out when the husband appears. He questions his wife and she still fearing the schemer accuses the unfortunate secretary, who is ordered from the house.

But instead of going home to his wife and child, the secretary choses as many men do the wrong road. Depression has taken hold of him and he resorts to the saloon where he drinks his fill. His wife becoming nervous at his absence telephones his employer who informs her of the unfortunate state of affairs. When the secretary returns home the next morning he is accused wrongfully by his wife. He tries to explain but to no avail. That night she leaves him and he, discouraged and despondent, becomes a wanderer going from bad to worse until finally one day weak and weary he arrives at an artist's studio where his sunken cheeks and grown beard have become an asset to him and he is engaged to pose. While in this position he is discovered by his accuser who seeing his unfortunate position, is softened in heart by her conscience.

She immediately goes to his wife and confesses the real truth of the situation. Thus things are righted again and the "villain" who makes his appearance in the home of his former fiance with the expectation of obtaining more money is seen by the husband who throws him from the house and to make matters worse as a final parting drops him into a running fountain of water which wets and humiliates him properly.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this feature play up the star and story as strong as you can. Mention some of her past performances and let your patrons know that she is rapidly coming to the fore as one of our most popular stars. And do not forget to mention that the story was written and direced by Leonce Perret who is considered one of our most modern directors. Mr. Perret could not have handled the scenario better giving special attention to detail and the arranging of the sets which are beautiful to look at. Do not forget also to mention that Miss Hampton wears many beautiful gowns during the showing of the picture.

And last but not least let your patrons know that Miss Hampton is supported by a very prominent supporting cast, among whom are Sidney Mason, Percy Standing, Arthur Donaldson, Windham Standing and Agnes Ayers.

You need not be afraid to exploit this feature to the limit for it will surely give satisfaction to your patrons.

"THE PEDDLER OF LIES"

(UNIVERSAL)

Good Production of Mechanical and Unreal Plot

"WE can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear," sums up this production. Director and continuity writer have evolved a very fine example of the cut and dried picture. From their bag of technical tricks they have selected such standard and dependable situations and bits of business as could be used and with great skill fitted them to the picture, with a result quite satisfactory if it were not for the artificiality of the basic idea. It seems a shame that so much that is good should be wasted on so ancient a theme.

The characters are carefully and painstakingly involved in a series of complications and are guided through multitudinous channels until it is time to clear up all matters and mark "finis" on the picture.

There has been supplied first-class direction, an excellent continuity considerable action, wonderful photography and some very beautiful exteriors. The cast is very good. The star is handsome, debonair and adequate to the requirements of the role. Nothing has been left undone after orders were given to begin shooting. Much was neglected before that; the selection of a story which would be worthy the amount of effort required to make a good picture. All of which leads us to reaffirm an opinion conveyed in our opening sentence. When all is said and done the picture is just "movie." It may please quite a lot of people. It may keep some more amused, but it will never be called a hit.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Ora Carew appearing with Frank Mayo in "The Peddler of Lies," a Universal picture

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Those who like the mystery picture, which is most people, are going to enjoy "The Peddler of Lies," the latest Universal picture starring Frank Mayo, which comes to the ——— theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ———.

The picture is the story of a stolen gem with a young man falsely suspected of being guilty. The mystery is unraveled by Frank Mayo as "Clamp." It is a congenial role for this star, who is daily growing in favor because of his engaging personality and ability to put over his scenes in a convincing manner. As his leading woman Mr. Mayo has Ora Carew and the whole supporting cast is exceptionally capable. William C. Dowlan directed.

In addition to a splendid and novel plot this feature has been photographed amid some very beautiful scenic backgrounds and also offers handsome gowns and much that is interesting in the way of "society stuff." To tell you more of the story would be to take away some of your enjoyment since this is the sort of picture which patrons of the theatre like to try to "guess out."

PROGRAM READER

Frank Mayo, handsome and talented Universal star, will be the star headlined in "The Peddler of Lies," a mystery melodrama which comes to this theatre for a ——— run beginning ———.

Some one is stealing the valuables of the guests at a house party. Among the missing articles is a valuable diamond. Like all well constructed pictures of this sort you suspect everyone but the right person. Especially do you suspect several people who have need of funds. Circumstantial evidence also enters into your guess as to who is guilty. But to tell you more would be to take from your pleasure in attempting to fathom the mystery.

Ora Carew is the talented leading woman who plays opposite Mr. Mayo. She too has a good role, in fact quite the equal of the star's. The balance of the cast are all well known and capable players, each especially selected for the role in which he appears.

The picture is in five reels and was directed by William C. Dowlan, a master at producing this sort of an offering.

SUGGESTIONS

Bill this as a mystery story emphasizing the stealing of the diamond episode. Ask your patrons if they believe in circumstantial evidence. Assert that the Courts hold that circumstantial evidence is the best of evidence, providing a motive can be proven. Then state that in this picture a motive is proven and all the evidence points to a certain young man being guilty, but he is innocent.

In the diamond mentioned supposed to be worth fifteen thousand dollars. you will have an opportunity to tie up in window displays with jewelry stores. You will also have a chance to get over press stories on the famous diamonds of the world and their value. You could also get some valuable publicity in a history of the most valuable diamonds owned in your city. In these stories make mention of the "Sahara" stone of the picture. For instance, as a leader start off with a description of the most famous diamond in the world and then claim that the plot of "The Peddler of Lies" was founded on an attempt to steal a diamond nearly as large, the very methods used in the picture being those almost successful in real life. Look up the history of any unusual jewelry thefts in your city and weave your press stories around their instances.

In Her Happiest Hour

By Carolyn Wells

Character of Story: Mystery.

Theme: Revenge.

Characters: Owen Prall, detective; Marybelle Moss, widow; Janet Field, her companion; Frank Wesley, her heir; Edith Wesley, his wife; Cissy Carreau, a friend; Rock Bellamy, another friend; Lord Herringdean, fiance of Mrs. Moss.

The Plot: The story revolves around the murder of Mrs. Moss in a room in which the door and all of the windows were locked. The victim is found asphyxiated in such a manner that it is apparent she did not commit suicide—the gas burner, long disused, being of such a height that it could not be turned on by accident. This occurs on the eve of Mrs. Moss's wedding to Lord Herringdean. The final solution of the mystery proves to be that Miss Field, the companion, ran a double-threaded needle through the wall with the thread attached to the gas-burner jet and turned the jet after the victim had gone to bed, sitting on the stair and pulling on the thread. The plot underlying the murder is this: Janet Field, a poor young woman was engaged to marry Frank Moss. She took a position as companion to Marybelle with the understanding that she would resign in a few months to be married. When Moss came to see Janet, Marybelle made up her mind to steal his affections and did so, with the result that he married her instead of Janet. Janet left. Marybelle did not get on well with Moss. He was ill, suffering from consumption, and ordered to a milder climate, but she refused to go with him or to let him go without her. As a consequence he died. Marybelle then sent for Janet to come and be her companion. Janet, who had a certain amount of Indian blood in her veins, came with the fixed idea of revenging herself upon the woman who had destroyed her happiness. She laid her plans far ahead, bored a hole in the wall at her convenience and then waited for an occasion when she knew where all the members of the household were and that they were all engaged and not likely to disturb her, when she carried out the rest of her arrangements. Prall, the detective learns from Vida, one of the maids, that Miss Field was sitting on the stairs the night of the murder—or rather early in the morning when the death of the widow occurred. From this and from certain small clues discovered in the apartment of the dead woman, he works out the method of the crime, and having repeated the story in the presence of the members of the household, calls for a confession which is immediately furnished by Miss Field. Having heard her story, the others decide that she shall be allowed to go without being prosecuted.

Locale: Any city.

Picture High Lights: The characters in the story as it stands lack sympathy with the exception of Janet, and she can hardly hold it at the end; a minor love interest with a second attempt to steal another woman's man might form a basic introduction to the theme for an actress content to be regarded as a "vamp" without sympathy and meeting her just deserts.

The Rider of King Log

By Holman Day

Character of Story: Western.

Theme: Progress. Love and adventure.

Characters: Old X. K. Kavanagh, lumber king; Clare, his daughter; Colonel Marthorn, financier and paper pulp king; Cora Marthorn, his daughter; Kenneth, his son; Abner Kezar, manager for Kavanagh; Donald Kezar, his grandson; Romeo Shank, fire warden; Dr. Archaleus March; Father Pierre; Lola Hebert, French half-breed; Paul Sabatis; Noel, Indian chief; Old Joel; Benson Nute.

The Plot: Old X. K. Kavanagh, ruler of the Toban country and head of the X. K. Lumber Company decides to give his daughter an education equal to that of "the best of 'em." He sends her to the same school where the daughter of the Temiscouata Paper Company is being educated. Cora Marthorn does not make Clare's experience at school any easier by telling that she is the daughter of some sort of "woodchopper." Old X. K. gets word that graduation has been advanced a month on the request of Marthorn's daughter and that to get to the school in time to see his daughter graduate he must start his drive down the river a month early. In spite of difficulties he does this and in so doing dynamites the river's tributaries, thus robbiing the paper company's drive of water and making it difficult for them to follow with their pulp timber. Marthorn sends Donaldson, a vice-president of his company, to remonstrate with Kavanagh but with no result. At the graduation the two men meet and when Marthorn insinuates that Clare has no business in a school with gentlewomen, Kavanagh knocks him down. Shortly after their return North, Kavanagh dies leaving his interests in the hands of his daughter, who selects as her first aid Donald Kezar, a smooth young villain who has betrayed Lola Hebert, the daughter of a French Canadian and granddaughter of Noel, an Indian chief. This girl is loved by Paul Sabatis, a half breed, who devotes himself to her though he knows she loves Donald. Kenneth Marthorn, about the time of the graduation marries a widow only to find that she has a husband already living in the West—an old man who indulges her in everything. Donald takes her home to her husband and to protect her refuses to explain to anyone the truth about his rumored marriage. Kenneth goes North as the chief engineer of his father's company and threatens to resign when he learns that the company plans to take unfair advantage of X. K. and other independent operators. Clare, who is a true daughter of old X. K., defies the Temiscouata company to do its worst, and though she has heard the scandal about Kenneth is finally convinced that he is trying to save her from the treachery of her competitors. Kezar endeavors to turn Clare against Kenneth and, failing this, sells out to Donaldson who secures the authority to take supreme command of the company operations. Kenneth thereupon resigns in earnest and starts out to enlist volunteers in the X. K. camps to combat the designs of the paper company. Clare learns of this and is convinced of Kenneth's good intentions. They become friends and he becomes her lieutenant. Kezar, who has been trailed by old Noel on his refusal to marry Lola, is caught in a bear trap while trying to shoot Kenneth. Kenneth and Clare are married and the Temiscouata company comes to the conclusion it has been going about matters the wrong way. A compromise and combination are brought about.

Locale: Far Northwest.

Picture High Lights: Very good material for feature picture. More action and incident than can be included in synopsis. Good atmosphere, strong love interest; suspense.

The Man Who Saw Wrong

By Jacob Fisher

Character of Story:

Theme:

Characters: Morton Payne, an artist; Adrea Varrick, a model; Allan Lawrence, a friend of Morton; Julius Lavigne, another artist; Aunt Margaret, Adrea's aunt and chaperone; Charles J. Wostenholm, head of the Wostenholm Foundation.

The Plot: The Wostenholm Foundation has offered a prize of $10,000 for the best picture offered for the exhibit of the year. Lavigne and Payne are the two principal contestants. Payne sees a remarkably beautiful young woman acting as a saleswoman in a shop and desires to use her for a model. At first she refuses but is finally persuaded by Lavigne to come to the country with her aunt with the understanding that she is to pose alternately for Lavigne and for Payne. A cottage is provided for her but they are hardly more than settled when the cottage takes fire and the two women narrowly escape with their lives, being rescued by Payne. It is suspected that the fire is incendiary but the suspicion attaches to nobody in particular. With the destruction of the cottage, Lavigne tries to persuade the girl to come to his house, but she and her aunt prefer to go to Payne's house. Payne meanwhile is falling in love with his model but has not mentioned this to her. Payne is painting a beautiful picture of her showing her as a young girl who is transfigured by a great love, holding a letter from her lover in her hand. Lavigne has a devilish genius for bringing out the evil in everyone and for making the most innocent woman wear a look of evil in his pictures. Lavigne, who has gambled in the stock market, sees Payne's picture and fears that Payne may win the prize. His own picture he has not shown to anyone. He contrives to get some wood alcohol into some liquor which Payne drinks with the result that Payne awakes the next morning stone blind. Adrea goes to Lavigne's house and catches a glimpse of the picture which shows her a wicked woman. She is shocked by this and rushes to Payne to tell him of this outrage. There she learns of the blindness which has come upon him. She hastily sends for Lawrence, who comes and brings a surgeon, but it is found that the optic nerve has been destroyed and that nothing can be done to restore Payne's sight. Lavigne disappears, taking his picture with him. Later they find that the picture has been entered for the prize. Lawrence persuades the committee to hang Payne's unfinished picture, but is informed that there is no chance of this picture winning the prize since it is still in an unfinished state. Lawrence, indignant that Lavigne should be given the prize after his plot against Payne and his treatment of the model, gets the head of the Foundation, Charles J. Wostenholm, to view the two pictures. Wostenholm is terribly shocked at the picture which Lavigne has painted, for it is apparently a picture of his wife, from whom he was separated through a misunderstanding. Explanations proved that Adrea is his daughter. Lavigne, coming to claim the prize, is forced to sign a confession and to leave the country. Payne, who has turned to authorship, learning that Adrea loves him, declares his own love and they are married.

Locale: New York and neighboring country.

Picture High Lights: Strong picture for small cast.

Lynch Lawyers

By Wm. Patterson White

Character of Story: Western.

Theme: Love and adventure.

Characters: Red Kane; Dot Lorimer; Ben Lorimer; her father, a nester; Tom Kane, Red's brother; Kansas Casey, deputy sheriff; Saltoun, owner of the Bar S; Buck Saylor, express agent; Lanpher, manager of the Double 8; Bruff and Lumley, Colorado deputies; Bradley Usher; Jakes Rule, sheriff; Judge Dolan; cowboys, gamblers and others.

The Plot: An express robbery occurs in the town of Farewell, Oklahoma, the robbers taking not only the money but the fifteen hundred pound safe as well; they also steal a number of horses. Suspicion settles on a "nester" named Lorimer, who has recently come to the country and settled at an abandoned ranch house. While searching for the robbers, Red Kane and his brother Tom come to the place and are driven away by Dot Lorimer, the nester's daughter, with a shot-gun. Red admires her spirit and falls in love with her. Following the nester from town Red and Tom find him injured by a tree which has fallen across the road and pinned him to the wrecked seat of his buckboard. They carry him home and bind up his wounds. While Red is still there a lynching party led by Lanpher, of the Double 8, arrives and Red is shot in defending the girl and her father. One of the men in the ranch party takes Red's side and saves him from being killed. Red is nursed by the girl. It develops that a Colorado sheriff from Flipup, Colorado, have come with a warrant to arrest Lorimer, charged with the murder of his own brother. Dot warns Lorimer with a smudge in the stove while talking with the posse in their house. Dot explains to Red that the brother made a drunken attack on her father just after their mine had been sold, the brother declaring that Ben Lorimer should not have more than a fourth of what was paid for the mine. Lorimer Lorimer took his half and left his brother in a drunken stupor. After Lorimer left someone killed the brother and stole his share of the money. Lorimer and Dot have heard of the murder but did not dare go back because the town of Flipup was run by scoundrels and thieves and they knew they would stand no chance of justice there. Lorimer is finally apprehended and put in jail at Farewell. Red engineers a jail break and gets him out. Red and his brother Tom then journey to Flipup, where they are hired as gunmen by Bradley Usher, the chief citizen of the town and also the leading bad man. Owner of two saloons, the hotel and a gambling den, he is also a money lender. Investigation in Flipup is not without its perils and after several gun-plays Red and his brother come into possession of evidence sufficient to convict the real murderers of Lorimer's brother. Usher, moved by a story of Reds' to the effect that the sheriff and his deputies had started on a spree in Farewell, has gone on to Farewell. Red returns to find a warrant out for his arrest for the jail break. He has the evidence, however, to convict his enemies and this is done in short order, after which Red and Dot are reunited.

Locale: Oklahoma.

Picture High Lights: Plenty of gunplay and local color. Sufficient plot to form the basis for a good Western feature.

The Great Impersonation

By E. Phillips Oppenheim

Character of Story: Intrigue; melodrama.

Theme: Impersonation and regeneration.

Characters: Sir Everard Dominey; Baron Leopold Von Ragestein; Lady Dominey; Princess Eiderstrom; Baron Terniloff, German Ambassador; Seaman; The Duke; the Duchess; Mrs. Unthank; Roger Unthank, her son; Doctor Harrison, Dr. Schmidt, of South Africa; Wolff, a secret agent; Eddy Pelham, of the English secret service.

The Plot: Everard Dominey, returning to his home one night, was set upon and nearly killed by a half-crazed disappointed suitor for the hand of his wife—a Roger Unthank, who was the son of the woman with whom Lady Dominey grew up. Staggering into his house covered with blood Dominey gives his wife such a shock that her reason is temporarily upset and thinking that he is a murderer, she will have nothing to do with him and declares that if he remains under the same roof with her, she will kill him. She is left in the care of Mrs. Unthank and Dominey sails for South Africa, leaving everyone with the impression that he killed Roger Unthank in the Dark Woods. In exile Dominey drinks more than is good for him, wastes his money and finally loses himself on a lion hunting trip near German East Africa. He stumbles into the camp of Baron Ragestein, a Major General in the Prussian army and sort of local governor. He turns out to be an Oxford friend—one Sigismund Devinter who had not, in college days, inherited his title. This Ragestein bears a very striking resemblance to Dominey; indeed their looks are almost identical except that Ragenstein is the better preserved and better set-up. Ragestein plans to murder Dominey and go to England as a spy in the character of Sir Everard Dominey. When Dominey overhears this plot he determines to defeat it. He manages to kill Ragestein and meets the German agent who was to have met Ragestein. Dominey returns to England, letting the Germans think that he is Ragestein and acting in their interest. Being an accomplished linguist, there is nothing in his speech to betray him. He finds that his house is haunted by a ghost, which howls under the windows at night. He is told that if he sleeps there his wife will kill him. She does come to his room with a knife but drops it. She soon displays a fondness for him but declares that she knows he is not her husband; that he is another man taking her husband's place. Princess Eiderstrom, whose husband was killed in a duel by Ragestein, tries to renew her romance with the supposed Ragestein. Dominey finds that he is supposed to stay on and take the place of Baron Terniloff when the declaration of war comes. Terniloff has been deceived by the German government and led to believe that Germany has only the most kindly feeling toward the British. Dominey, as Ragestein, is told that war may come at any time. Dominey discovers that Roger Unthank is not dead, but living in the wood; that he comes to the house and howls for his mother to bring him food. The man is put in an asylum and his mother sent away. Lady Dominey rapidly recovers her senses when removed from this influence. Dominey captures the German spies with whom he is working and enlists.

Locale: South Africa and England.

Picture High Lights: Very good picture material with strong dramatic plot. Considerable action and interest will be found in the story which could not be included in this brief synopsis.

The Builders

By Ellen Glasgow

Character of Story: Character study.

Theme: Selfishness.

Characters: Caroline Meade; David Blackburn, Angelica Blackburn, his wife; Roane Fitzhugh, her brother; Charles Colfax, Mrs. Colfax; Letty Blackburn, David's child; Mary Blackburn, his sister; Alan Wythe, fiance of Mary; Mrs. Timberlake, housekeeper.

The Plot: Though this story deals ostensibly with the reactions of the modern South toward the European war and the demand for unity of thought and action upon the part of all Americans, it is much more intimately related to the study of the character of a single woman, Angelica Blackburn. Caroline Meade, born of a good Southern family which has lost all the money it once had, is a trained nurse. Through a friend she secures a position as governess to Letty Blackburn, who is a beautiful child but suffering from a spinal affliction. When she first comes to the house of the Blackburns, Caroline agrees with the general report that Mrs. Blackburn is a much abused woman and that her husband fails to understand her. David is a dreamer rather than a doer. He believes in a united country in which old party political lines shall be wiped out. To this end he labors in politics, but his idealism and ambitions suffer a blighting influence in his wife. This woman is virtuous in the strictest sense of the word, but selfish throughout. She allows nothing to stand in the way of gaining what she wants. She makes a point of posing as a martyr. She declares that her husband is cruel when he will not encourage the presence of her brother, Roane Fitzhugh, who is a drunken scapegrace of the gallant type, who must make love to every woman whether she likes it or not. Caroline learns that Angelica has been telling her husband that Caroline is in love with Roane. The next thing she learns is that Angelica has encouraged Mary's fiance, Alan Wayte, to fall in love with Angelica. He reads her plays and takes her opinion rather than that of Mary. Mary is wretched and finally tells David the cause of her trouble. When David remonstrates with his wife she cries out that he is cruel to her and screams as if she had been attacked. Returning late from a call to a sick woman's side, Caroline meets David in the hall and Angelica orders her from the house, pretending that she believes David has been making love to her. David tries to persuade her not to go, but Caroline will not stay. Angelica then leaves David, but does not care enough for Alan to marry him when she has the chance. David, believing that she has gone forever, is in hopes that he can marry Caroline, for by now he is in love with her, but when Angelica begins to grieve for her child he feels that it is his duty to let her return, though this will cost him his only chance of happiness. This brings the story to a close with Roane fighting in Europe, where the war has brought out the best that is in him; Caroline on her way to France; Mary already there—her romance shattered; Angelica back home as a martyr.

Locale: Virginia.

Picture High Lights: If it were possible to dispose of Angelica at the finish, thus clearing the way to a happy ending, this would make a very good picture, depicting a type too often met with in real life.

Mist of Morning

By Isabel Ecclestone Mackay

Character of Story: Drama.

Theme: Heredity.

Characters: David Greig; Rosme Selwyn; Angus Greig, David's foster father; Cousin Mattie; Clara Sims; William Carter Fish; Murray Willard; Bunny Weeks; Madame Rameses; Mrs. Carr; John Baird; Herr Stumpf.

The Plot: David Greig, who has been brought up as the son of Angus Greig, learns when a lad that Angus is not his real father; that his real father was cruel and selfish. David fears that this may be inherited by himself and for a time is greatly troubled by the thought. As a child he makes the acquaintance of Rosme Selwyn but loses sight of her in later years. David, grown to manhood, goes to college in Montreal, where he becomes a friend of Murray Willard, a charming scapegrace, who becomes more and more unscrupulous as he plunges into dissipation on money furnished by his uncle, John Baird, an inventor. David is trapped into an engagement by Clara Sims, a handsome shop girl, who doesn't in the least care for him, and who is, in fact, in love with Murray, but feels that David will one day amount to something and that it is time she was married. She runs to David's room during a thunder storm and declares that there is a burglar in her room. She times her visit so that she is sure to be found in this compromising position by the landlady and trusts to David's chivalry to get her out of an embarrassing situation. This results in the engagement. David, meanwhile, has renewed his acquaintance with Rosme, now copy writer in an advertising agency. Rosme is interested in David and he in her, but the shadow of Clara Sims keeps them apart. David makes the acquaintance of John Baird and works with him in his shop. David hits upon the plan for an improved engine for an airship. Herr Stumpf, a client of the advertising agency in which Rosme works, tries to buy it. John Baird, who fears that Germany is preparing for war, warns David not to sell to a German and David respects John's wishes, although, personally, he does not believe there is any danger of war and moreover feels that he needs the money to carry on other experiments. Stumpf holds many of Willard's promissory notes, won in card games, and also a check to which Willard has forged his uncle's name. Holding these over Murray Willard's head Stumpf induces Murray to bring pressure to make David sell the engine. David refuses, however, and Stumpf and Willard plan that Willard shall go down to David's native village where David is establishing a workshop and that while David is there with the plans Willard shall steal them. Willard arrives at the village to find Clara there. Clara thinks Willard has followed her because he loves her, but when she finds he is interested in the plans, she begins to doubt this. It has been arranged that after the plans are stolen Willard is to fire a shot and give the alarm, a confederate making it appear that the safe in the workshop has been forced. Clara surprises Willard at work and to quiet her he promises to marry her. Stumpf's emissary shoots Willard and fatally wounds him. Clara declares her love for Willard as he is dying. She also betrays her knowledge that Willard stole the plans. Willard turns out to be half brother of David—a younger son of the father. With Willard dead, John tells David he had substituted a false set of plans for the real fearing theft. David and Rosme are married.

Locale: Toronto and Canadian village.

Picture High Lights: Good melodrama.

The Fire of Green Boughs

By Mrs. Victor Rickard

Character of Story: Society drama.

Theme: Character study.

Characters: Sylvia Tracy, niece of Lady Royden; Sir Jasper Royden, her uncle; Dominick Royden, her cousin; Adrianna Hendred; Lord Carfax, her fiance; Willie Kent, M. P. Ambrose Boyne, head of the Irish Constabulary; Gallagher, his lieutenant; Mrs. Tracy, caretaker at Royden Lodge.

The Plot: At the death of her aunt, Sylvia Tracy is left without any means and with no relatives but her uncle, Sir Jasper, who cares nothing at all for her, and her cousin, Rev. Dominick Royden, a very clever young clergyman who has a large personal following. Sylvia is a flighty person, who has no sense in money matters and who is too much given to speaking her mind to hold a position long in the commercial world, although she attempts this on her aunt's death, refusing the offer of Sir Jasper, to put her in charge of Royden Lodge. While she is in one of her destitute spells she enters a restaurant in London intending to have a splendid feast and hoping that an air raid will come to distract the attention of the waiters and the proprietor when it comes time to pay her bill. She is spared the necessity of this, however, because Willie Kent, M.P., happens to sit at her table, and although he is a stranger when he sits down, he soon becomes acquainted. When she finds that Willie Kent is from the very section of Ireland where Royden Lodge is situated, Sylvia, taking a fancy to Kent, decides that she will, after all, accept the invitation of her uncle and go to Royden Lodge. She does so and there makes the acquaintance of Ambrose Boyne, in charge of the Irish Constabulary. The Constabulary are guarding the Irish Coast from German invasion and, at the same time, keeping one eye open for Sinn Fein uprisings. Boyne becomes quite devoted to Sylvia. One night there is a big storm off the coast and a German submarine is sunk. It is thought that some of the crew may have escaped. Sylvia hears a scratching at the window and finds an exhausted German sailor seeking refuge from the elements. He has dragged himself up from the beach, where he was cast by the storm. Her heart is touched and she does not wish to turn him over to the authorities, although she knows this is her duty. She thinks that the man will die, and in this she is correct, for he does die. The servants are preparing a grave for him when Gallagher searches the house and discovers the body. Boyne then accuses Sylvia of being a spy and puts her under arrest. Sylvia smuggles out a telegram to Kent signed with Boyne's name, stating that Sylvia is in trouble and needs him. Kent comes and persuades Boyne to let her go. She goes to London and Dominick secures her a position as secretary to Adrianna Hendred. Lord Carfax falls in love with Sylvia to Adrianna's disgust. Boyne is invited to the house and without mentioning names tells of the experience at Royden Lodge. Adrianna plans a trap. She introduces Sylvia to Boyne who will not shake hands. Adrianna insists upon an explanation. The story of the German sailor comes out, and Sylvia is disgraced with everyone but Kent, who insists that she marry him at once. Carfax returns to Adrianna.

Locale: London and coast of Ireland.

Picture High Lights: A good deal of action. Sylvia is type which is harmless and humorous, but always in trouble. Needs snap at finish.

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

THE husband speaks: "All right—I'll take my share of the blame—but how about yours? All you do to make me happy is to improve my mind. All you talk about is the virtues I haven't got and the faults I have. Well I married a woman—not a governess! I want to live in a home, not in a convent! I want a sweetheart, not a judge!"

FOR sheer entertainment value "Why Change Your Wife?" has never been surpassed. It's as up-to-date as tomorrow's newspaper and yet it has a theme as old as life and love itself—a theme more entertaining than any story the mind of man has yet conceived. But above and beyond all that, its one biggest and greatest asset is in the fact that it's

And here are the folks who just can't help coming to see it;

1. All those who have a little secret in the cellar. 2. All those whose cellars are bare. 3. All those who know where you can get it. 4. All those who would like to know. 5. All those who wouldn't get it, if they could. 6. All wets. 7. $99\frac{3}{8}$ per cent of the drys.

It's funny; it's clean, it is guaranteed not to offend and it has an ending that they'll talk about for months.

"Sure fire winner with any audience."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"The fastest, funniest picture the star ever made. Better than his last one and has more action packed into it than any other film of its size. Fairbanks at his best and that's going some. Broke all house records for business. Flood scene was a masterpiece that put them all in the shade."

"A splendid feature which pleased my patrons. I played it for one week and it did big business for me every day."

Consensus—"Splendid picture, good puller."

LIFE'S WASTERS, ALL OF THEM

BEAUTIFUL moths clustering in the flame of a rich man's favor, while he plays fast and loose with the only one worth while—the absent girl who is ignorant of his perfidy.

That's the theme on which HAROLD MacGRATH has built a story that carries your audience spellbound around the world — into the dark corners, even, where civilization has scarcely dared venture. Vivid, colorful scenes run through this picture as thread through a loom.

WHAT MORE COULD YOU ASK?

"THE Luck of the Irish" will get the money; the Los Angeles showing proved this for a solid week! It beats laughing gas for fun. It's a love story — starts with the love theme and sticks like a lover to it. The action is tense—plots, intrigue and enough barefisted fighting to keep your patrons gripping the arms of their chairs. It's a whale of a story that leaps into action as from the pages of a book and seizes and holds attention.

January 20, 1920

Mr. Burton Holmes,
2 West 67th Street,
New York, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Holmes:-

Just a line of congratulation on your Paramount scenic "MIRRORS OF NATURE" which we are showing this week.

It is a scenic gem and the bright spot of this week's show. At both our afternoon and evening performances it received very appreciative applause from the audience. Our orchestra is playing three particularly appropriate musical numbers that fit it so well, that together the musical selections and pictures make it a worth while attraction. I hope I will be able to see my way clear to secure some more of these delightful films from you.

With kindest regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Jack Eaton,

[illegible] the sky when they happen to look up, should see it once if never before; twice [illegible] It will do them good.

Another picture of pure beauty is Bur[illegible] Holmes's "Mirrors of Nature," at th[illegible] Strand. It shows what pictures are made by bridges, steeples, mountains, towns—and still water under them.

[illegible] photoplay at the Strand [illegible] "The Beauty [illegible]" [illegible]therine MacDonald in the leading rôle. It takes itself seriously, but many of yesterday afternoon's spectators seemed to think it comic. They laughed just when the hero was telling the heroine that he had married her for hate, and would like to do all sorts of terrible things to her because she had cheated him, but, damn him, he couldn't because he loved her.

The story is a stock "society romance" designed to overwhelm romancers of sweet sixteen, and the trouble yesterday was, perhaps, that the youthful ones, instead of being at the Strand, were skating in Central Park.

Undeniably, Miss MacDonald is pretty, but the story was too much for her and the others in the cast, especially with its platitudinous and heavily heroic subtitles. It is about a girl who consents to marry for money, and when she is pre[illegible]ted by her own carelessness, coinci[illegible] a villainness, marries for love is the name of the new motion picture camera which photographs a maximum of 384 pictures a second. This is 24 times faster than the normal motion picture camera.

No other camera in the world is capable of taking motion pictures for public exhibition at this phenomenal rate of speed.

The STEREOSPEED is the invention of Mr. Earle Emlay, whose previous high-speed photography gained nation-wide popularity at the New York Strand and other leading theatres as an essential feature of a prominent Weekly News Reel.

STEREOSPEED PRODUCTIONS are now being made under the personal supervision of Mr. Emlay, whose combined experience and talent assure exhibitors high-speed pictures that will be enthusiastically received by the picture-loving public, which has already voiced its approval of this form of entertainment.

STEREOSPEED PRODUCTIONS will be presented in a distinctive manner befitting an attraction of this character, never for a moment forgetting that the mission of each picture is to entertain its audience.

STEREOSPEED PRODUCTIONS will be novel. Not only will retarded motion be shown from a scientific and educational standpoint, but the comedy element will not be neglected, and the combination will be of universal appeal.

STEREOSPEED PRODUCTIONS will soon be ready for release. Distributing arrangements will be announced shortly.

THE remarkable interest shown in "Empty Arms," the production plus made by Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, and the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, which is issued in connection with this extraordinary film, is proven by the fact that, one day last week, one hundred and eighty-one letters, seventeen telegrams and fifteen telephone calls were received by the producers. Represented were over a hundred and fifty cities of twenty-seven different states; over a hundred and forty theatres, including six of the largest in the country; over forty state rights buyers and five of the big distributors who are anxious to "take over" this big money-maker.

ALICE JOYCE

in the Spectacular Drury Lane Melodrama

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS"

By Augustus Harris, Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton

Scenario by Lucien Hubbard Directed by GEORGE TERWILLIGER

On the limited confines of the biggest stage in London this famous play, that took three men to write it, was hailed as a spectacle and as such it startled and delighted a continent. Season after season at the Drury Lane Theatre its vivid, melodramatic story and its thrilling, pulse-pounding racing scene both charmed and thrilled hundreds of thousands.

If on the stage it was a spectacle what should it be as photoplay? Then added to this is the princess presence of ALICE JOYCE in the role of the Duchess of Desborough, fighting her fight alone, but magnificent, against the odds of greedy, treacherous friends, a spiritually blind husband and undeserved dishonor.

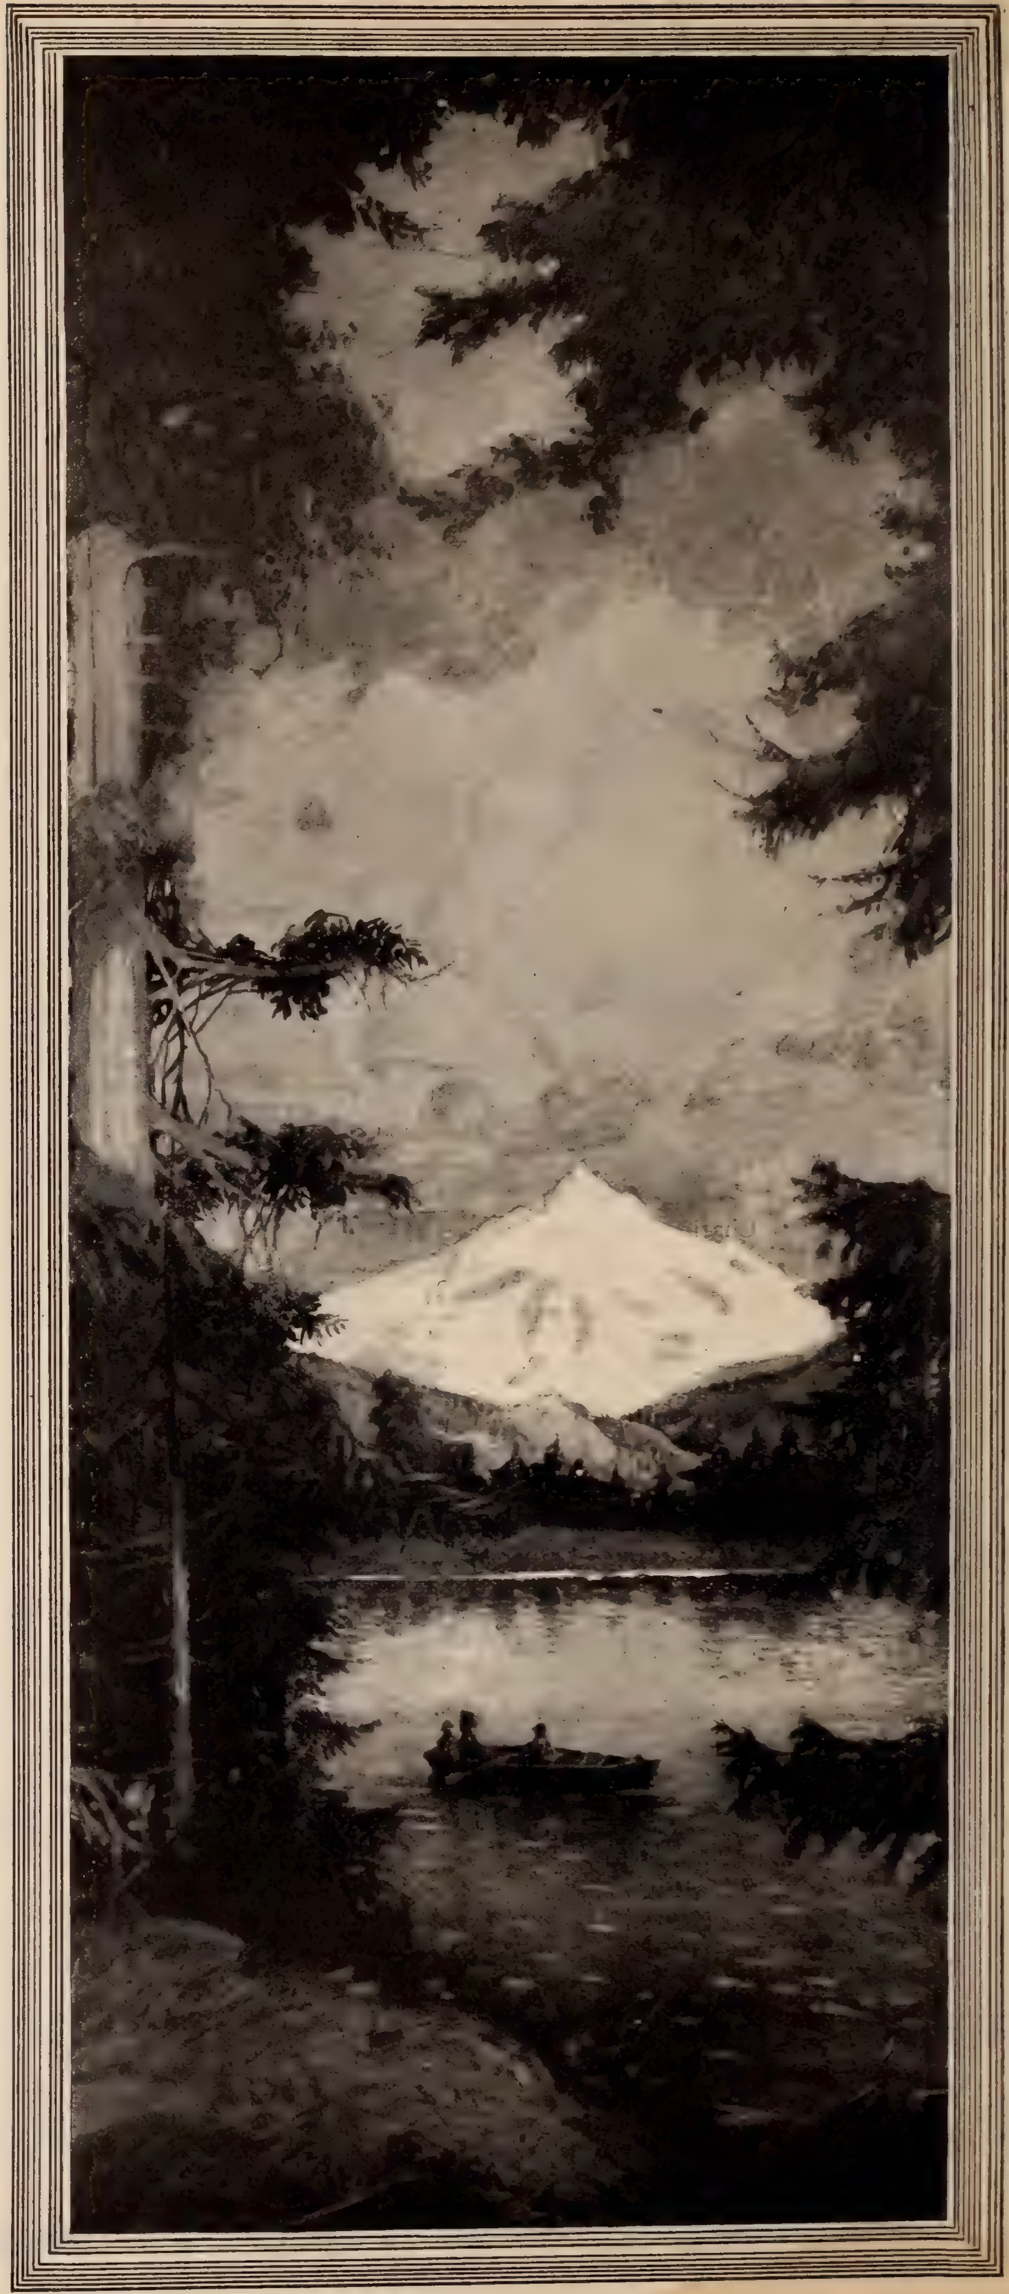
The Sixth Year

The story of "Scenics Beautiful" is a history of motion pictures. They are the oldest, best known and best loved of scenic films. First in artistic beauty, first in human interest, and first in the hearts of the public.



"Scenics Beautiful"

Produced by Robert C. Bruce

The Rivoli, this week, is showing "Wanderlust"—eightieth of the "Scenics Beautiful"—and first of the new series of 1920.

Director Hugo Riesenfeld has again contracted for all the new subjects for the Rialto and Rivoli. These great theatres, and scores of others, have used practically every one of the eighty "Bruce" releases, from the beginning down to the present day.

There is a certain satisfaction in the knowledge that this "Educational" series has always been successful—but it is more gratifying to know that the newest releases are our best.

The record that has been established is impressive—but more important to the exhibitor is the fact that the new series provides the greatest opportunity for money-making exploitation.

There is a personal guarantee behind every "Educational" single-reel, a personal interest in how well it pleases your audience. The next few months will see the inauguration of our complete short-subject program, and distribution in twenty cities.

Sincere Flattery

The wise exhibitor will note well the name, the style and the quality of the "Bruce" Scenics. Like all pioneer attractions that have been successful, they are widely imitated. A word to the wise is sufficient.

To Lose Money Gamble on Wall Street—To Make Money Rent a Film that is Exploited with RITCHEY Posters!

WHEN a distributor furnishes RITCHEY posters with his film he assures for the exhibitor greatly increased profits. As a result he obtains for himself that exhibitor's goodwill,—an invaluable asset!

More than ever before the public are demanding the best, and the best in posters are unquestionably and undeniably RITCHEY posters! They are more than superior,—they are supreme! They are fine in their conception,—they are as perfect in their design and execution as the greatest organization of poster experts in America can make them.

Making posters of that type is our sole and only function. The function of our posters is to crowd,—and to overcrowd, the individual exhibitor's auditorium. Because they do that, he wants them, and when he doesn't get them he is losing money to which he is justly entitled, for tabulated box-office statistics will positively prove them to be the most profitable posters possible to use!

Where Are the "First Runs"?

¶ Kansas City is challenging New York for "first-run" honors; Chillicothe, Ohio, has had occasion to tilt its nose at Los Angeles. Boston, Cleveland, Dayton, Cincinnati, Washington, and any number of heretofore modest cities, are frequently given opportunity to boast of "showing the pictures for the first time on any screen—anywhere."

What is the meaning of this latest twist in an ever-changing industry's policies?

The laurels of New York and Los Angeles are slipping. Broadway is waiting its turn after Main Street. The vanity of the Times Square film man is given the shock of awaiting a report from Jacksonville, Florida, on the latest big "special."

We have sought an explanation of the phenomena from film men of varying experience —distributing, exhibiting, advertising. The angles they give will be of interest:

"It shows the keen struggle for business that is being waged this season," said a distribution executive. "The good pictures were never so well apportioned among the companies, and it seems to me that exhibitors were never so much on their toes, jockeying for every advantage.

"The result is that a print that is in the exchange is a print that is ready to work. And very often it has to work; else a pet customer will go shopping to some other exchange."

The exhibitor to whom we spoke saw it from a different angle. "Oh, rats," he growled, "It only means that here and there throughout the country there is an exhibitor who has an especially good 'pull' with his exchange."

The advertising man pointed his satire in another direction. "New York is beginning to allow exchange managers the exercise of some judgment," was his declaration. "Why should the exhibitor and the manager sit and idly twiddle their thumbs waiting for a release date when local conditions demand action?

"If the exhibitor who gives the best presentation and the liveliest advertising in a territory has an open date isn't it good business to forget a release date and give the picture a good sendoff? That's one thing exchange managers are doing. Another is, they are able to stretch a point for a 'regular' customer when his opposition seems likely to have an 'overshadowing' attraction."

There is likelihood that the explanations for the new first-run situation are as varied as the imaginations of the men who are asked to give them—and as numerous.

But one point stands out—important enough without interpretation.

The shackles of the "release date" have been removed.

And this works both ways.

Big New York and Chicago theaters will be found successfully playing pictures which have been seen in Kansas City and Cincinnati weeks and months previously.

The picture is the essential; the "release date" has lost its meaning.

One of the platitudes of the business that nevertheless seemed always to fall on deaf ears is coming into its own. We now see the facts proving that, "No matter how old a picture may be it is always first run in any city when it first plays that city."

There was a time when the exhibitor anxiously awaited his trade paper solely to get the first look at the list of advance releases.

It's a wise showman nowadays who occasionally gives a glance backward over the releases to fill a date with a picture that has yet to play his town but which has proven itself elsewhere many moons before.

W A Johnston

Speaking Editorially

A Case in Point

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON'S remarks on the preceding page are well illustrated from week to week in the pages of our department, "With the First Runs." Particularly is this true of that phase of the matter which finds the metropolitan cities showing productions many months after smaller communities have discovered their worth.

A case in point is the record of "Blind Husbands." While this production received an early showing at New York's Capitol, it seems to be reversing the usual procedure in many territories and establishing its value in the one and two day towns long before it reaches the one week "key cities."

Here is proof of the pudding that exhibitors big and little are "shopping" for their entertainment, regardless of the mythical "age" of a subject. Even better than its indication of where the pictures are being given their initial showing, is the value of the "With the First Run" department as an indication of the pictures that are being selected by the "shoppers."

Picking the "Good Ones"

JUST as we write these lines the Director of our Exhibitor Service Bureau turns from a stack of newspapers representing a dozen cities throughout the country to remark:

"You can't tell me there is nothing in this 'open market.' I can find evidence when I go searching for ads on the latest pictures.

"On the weeks that one or two extra good productions are issued you will find theatres all over the country showing them. Then will come a stretch of three or four weeks without any subject that stands out because of merit—and what happens?

"The ads give the answer. With a unanimity that seems uncanny managers in every section will be found turning to productions released weeks and months previously but for some reason not heretofore shown in their sections. This hasn't happened just once, but recurs with each completion of the cycle of production from extra good to bad and indifferent. No matter what the release charts bring forth, exhibitors are finding the good ones if they have to go back months."

Longer Runs a Reality

GLAD of the assurance that the "open market" is not a chimera, but that it really does seem to mean something, the thought comes to our mind that recent news stories have also shown that the "fewer and better pictures, and longer runs" gospel is also bearing fruit.
